Enlist the demands of madaaris reforms.

Madaaris often demand for following reforms:

1. The wafaq degrees of Matric (Sanwiya Aama) and Intermediate (Sanwiya Khaasa) are not approved yet, whereas its higher degree, Shahadat ul-Aalmia is recognized as equal to MA Islamic Studies and Arabic. The government should accept these lower-level degrees as equal to the formal educational system.
2. The wafaq should be affiliated with the Federal Ministry of Education or Federal Ministry of Religious Affairs. Despite passing of the 18th amendment, the madaaris prefer to remain part of the federal government. Madaaris should also link with the Higher Education Commission (a Government higher studies oversight body) and all education grants should be distributed among madaaris through it.
3. The Madaaris should be exempted from all utility bills, and this will be the best way of cooperation from government side.
4. Obstacles of bureaucracy for registration of madaaris should be removed in the registration process.
5. Opportunities should be provided for madaaris students for easy admission in universities and participation in competitive exams.
6. The government should provide opportunities of job to wafaq students in all its departments.

Gender disparity in education?

Gender disparities persist in education. Girls often face barriers like early marriage, cultural norms, and lack of resources. Efforts are ongoing to ensure equal access to education for both girls and boys.

Role of religion in equity?

Religion can play a significant role in promoting equity in education by influencing values, beliefs, and practices that support equal access to education for all individuals. In many cultures, religious teachings emphasize the importance of justice, compassion, and equality, which can translate into efforts to ensure that educational opportunities are accessible to everyone regardless of their background or circumstances. Religious organizations often run schools and educational programs that cater to marginalized or disadvantaged communities, providing them with the resources and support needed to access quality education. These initiatives can help bridge the gap between privileged and underprivileged students, promoting equity in education.

Madrassa and politics?

Religious schools, known as madrassas, play a significant role in Pakistani politics, especially through their connections with religious political parties. These parties, representing different sects like Deobandis, Barelvis, Ahl-e-Hadith, and Shia, have strong ties to specific madrassas. A study found that a majority of madrassas have political affiliations, with most linked to religious political parties. While some madrassa boards prefer to stay apolitical, others like Rabita ul-Madaris support specific political parties. It is suggested that students focus on their education and avoid active political involvement until completing their studies to maintain a balance between education and politics.
