A. Background Investigations

This step is used to check accuracy of application form through former employers and references. Verification of education and legal status to work Credit history Criminal records is also made.

Negligent Hiring and Retention

Negligent hiring has become a critical concern in the selection process. An employer can be held responsible for an employee's unlawful acts if it does not reasonably investigate applicants' backgrounds and then assigns potentially dangerous persons to positions where they can inflict harm.

B. Conditional Job Offer

After obtaining and evaluating information about the finalists in a job selection process, the manager must take the most critical step of all: making the actual hiring decision. The person whose qualifications most closely conform to the requirements of the open position should be selected.

C. Physical Exam

After the decision has been made to extend a job offer, the next phase of the selection process involves the completion of a physical examination for the successful applicant.

D. Permanent Job Offer

If physical test/exam proves eligibility of the candidate as per requirement of the job, final offer is made to applicant by the concerned department or supervisor in the concerned department.

Notification to Candidates:

The selection process results should be made known to candidates—successful and unsuccessful—as soon as possible. Any delay may result in the firm losing a prime candidate,

E. Selecting Managers

While selecting managers for the organization, organizations can have three options which are:

I. Hiring Parent Country Nationals (PCN)

II. Hiring Host Country Nationals (HCN)

III. Hiring third Country Nationals (TCN)

All of these approaches are having some pros and cons let's discuss them briefly:

I. Parent-Country Nationals

Parent country nationals are residents of home country.

Advantages

- Better organizational Control and Coordination
- Promising managers are given International experience.
- PCNs are the best people for the job.

Disadvantages

- Adaptation to the host country may take a long time
- PCNs may impose an inappropriate headquarter style
- Compensation for PCNs and HCNs may differ

II. Host-Country Nationals

Host country national are residents of the host country.

Advantages

- Language and other barriers are eliminated
- Hiring costs are reduced
- No work permit is required
- Continuity of management improved

Disadvantages

- Control and Coordination of headquarters may be impeded.
- Hiring HCN's limits opportunities for PCN's to gain overseas experience.

III. Third-Country Nationals

If required talent is not available in home or host country than national s of the third country can be hired as mangers.

Advantages

- Salary and benefits requirements may be lower than for PCNs
- TCNs may be better informed than PCNs about the host country.

Disadvantages

- The host Government may resent the hiring of TCNs
- TCNs may not want to return to their own countries after assignment.

F. Socialization:

Teaching the corporate culture and philosophies about how to do business

Assumptions about Socialization

- Influences performance
- Increases organizational stability
- New members suffer anxiety
- Does not occur in a vacuum

A. Socialization

Employee orientation programs provide new employees with the basic background information required to perform their jobs satisfactorily.

- Welcome party
- Job rotation
- On job training etc.

I. Purposes of Socialization

Socialization formats are unique to each firm. However, some basic purposes include emphasizing these areas: the employment situation (job, department, and company), company policies and rules, compensation and benefits, corporate culture, team membership, employee development, dealing with change, and socialization.

a. The Employment Situation

A basic purpose, from the firm's viewpoint, is to have the new employee become productive as quickly as possible.

b. Company Policies and Rules

Every job within an organization must be performed considering the guidelines and constraints provided by policies and rules.

c. Compensation and Benefits

Employees will have a special interest in obtaining information about the reward system.

d. Corporate Culture

The firm's culture reflects, in effect, how we do things around here.

e. Team Membership

A new employee's ability and willingness to work in teams is most likely determined before he or she is hired.

f. Employee Development

Employees should know exactly what is expected of them and what is required by the firm for advancement in the job or via promotion.

g. Dealing with Change

Employees at all levels must learn to effectively deal with change in order to survive in their jobs.

h. Socialization

In order to reduce the fear that new employees may experience, attempts should be made to integrate the person into the informal organization.

II. Stages in socialization Process:

Socialization can be conceptualized as a process made up of three stages.

a. Pre-arrival Stage:

This stage explicitly recognizes that each individual arrives with a set of organizational values, attitudes, and expectations.

b. Encounter Stage:

Upon entry into the organization, new members enter the encounter stage. Here the individuals face the possible dichotomy between their expectations about their jobs, their coworkers, their supervisors, and the organization in general and reality.

c. Metamorphosis Stage:

Finally, the new member must work out any problems discovered during the encounter stage. This may mean going through changes.

III. Many People Socialize New Hires

New employee socialization or orientation covers the activities involved in introducing a new employee to the organization and to his or her work unit.

a. HRM Department:

HRM department can conduct the orientation in order to socialize the newly hired employees with the working environment of the organization.

b. Supervisor:

Immediate supervisor of particular department can also be the source of informing the employees about the culture, rules, procedures and policies of the organization.

c. Peers:

Peers and coworkers of the new hires can perform the orientation function in order to tell the expectation of employers and requirements of the organization as can also answer the queries raised from the employee side.

d. Organizational culture:

Every organization has its own unique culture. This culture includes longstanding, and often unwritten, rules and regulation; a special language that facilitates communication among members; shared standards of relevance as to the critical aspects of the work that is to be done;

e. CEO:

The CEO's first responsibility is to welcome new employees aboard and talk to them about what a good job choice they made. The CEO is in position to inspire these new employees by talking about what it is like to work for the organization.

IV. Topics covered in employee Orientation program:

Following topics are covered in orientation or socialization process.

a. Introduction:

Regarding the organization, supervisor, trainers, and coworkers and to system

b. Job Duties:

It provides job related information like, Job location Job tasks Job safety requirements

c. Organizational Issues:

This provides the information about the overall organization it may include; History of employer, organization of employer, name & titles of key executive, employee's titles and departments, layout of physical facilities, probationary period.

d. Employee Benefits:

This part provides the information about the benefits that are offered by the organization like; Pay scales & paydays, vacations rest break, training & education benefits, counseling, housing facilities, insurance benefits, retirement program,

The Hiring Process

Hiring process is completed here because orientation or the socialization process is the last step of hiring.

B. Training

Training is a process whereby people acquire capabilities to aid in the achievement of organizational goals.

C. Development

All efforts to provide employees with the abilities the organizations will need in the future

D. Training and Development Trends:

- Skill requirements will continue to increase

- Will the training work?
- Is Training the Solution?
- Are the Goals Clear and Realistic?
- Is Training a Good Investment?
- Will Training Work?

II. The Training Process

“What are our Training needs?” and “What do we want to accomplish through our TRAINING efforts?”

Phases of Training

a. Phase 1: Needs Assessment & Establishing Objectives

In order to compete effectively, firms must keep their employees well trained. The first step in the Training process is to determine Training needs.

Organizational Analysis:

It is an examination of the kinds of problems that an organization is experiencing and where they are located within organization.

Task/Operational Analysis:

An operational analysis identifies the kinds of the skills and behaviors required of the incumbents of a given job and the standards of performance that must be met.

Personal Analysis:

The objective of the personnel analysis is to examine how well individual employees are performing their jobs.

- Number of employees experiencing skill deficiency:

Number of employees supposed to be trained.

- Severity of skill deficiency:

What are the advantages that are being faced by the organization due to absence of that skill?

- Importance of skill:

How important is skill to be possessed by workforce?

- Extent to which skill can be improved with Training:

Would there be real difference in skill level in case the training program is conducted.

Determining Training Needs:

Following sources can help organization to assess either there is a need for Training or not.

A Training method in which participants are required to respond to specific problems they may actually encounter in their jobs.

- Computer-based

Computer based training is a teaching method that takes advantage of the speed, memory, and data manipulation capabilities of the computer for greater flexibility of instruction.

- Multimedia

Multimedia is an application that enhances computer-based learning with audio, animation, graphics, and interactive video.

- Virtual reality

It is a unique computer-based approach that permits trainees to view objects from a perspective otherwise impractical or impossible.

- Video Training

The use of videotapes continues to be a popular Training method. An illustration of the use of videotapes is provided by behavior modeling.

- Vestibule training

Training that takes place away from the production area on equipment that closely resembles the actual equipment used on the job.

Why Transfer of Training Fails

- Don't learn material
- Don't understand "real life" applications
- Lack of confidence
- Forgetting the material

d. Phase 4: Evaluating Training

- Participants' Opinions:

Evaluating a training program by asking the participants' opinions of it is an inexpensive approach that provides an immediate response and suggestions for improvements.

- Behavioral Change:

Tests may indicate fairly accurately what has been learned, but they give little insight into desired behavioral changes.

- Accomplishment of Training Objectives:

Still another approach to evaluating training programs involves determining the extent to which stated objectives have been achieved.

- Benchmarking

Benchmarking utilizes exemplary practices of other organizations to evaluate and improve training programs. It is estimated that up to 70 percent of American firms engage in some sort of benchmarking.

- A Case for Simplicity:

Value is the measure of impact and positive change elicited by the training.
