Informal and Formal Assessment

Informal Assessment can take a number of forms: starting with incidental, unplanned comm and responses, along with coaching and other important feedback to the students. Examples include saying "Nice job", "Good work!" "Did you say can or can't?" etc. Usually embedded in classroom t they are designed to elicit performance without recording results and making fixed judgments. Form assessments are exercises or procedures specifically designed to know the skills and knowledge. Th systematic, planned sampling techniques and are constructed to give teacher and student an appraisa student's achievement.

Formative Assessment

Evaluating students in the process of "forming" their competencies and skills with the goal helping them to continue that growth process. For all practical purposes, virtually all kinds of inform assessment are (or should be) formative. It is done at a micro level every time we indicate that som is wrong and help students get it right. But it can also take place when teachers go through th progress and achievement tests.

81/198

Summative Assessment

It aims to measure, or summarize, what a student has grasped, and typically occurs at the en course or a unit of instruction. There are final exams in a course or general proficiency exams. M the prevailing tests in an L2 instruction include (quizzes, periodic tests, midterm exams, etc.)

Topic- 079: Testing, Assessment, and Teaching

It shows the important relationship among testing, assessing, and teaching. However, th some differences between Language Assessment and Testing.

On the other hand, assessment is an ongoing process that encompasses a much wider domain. Whenever a student responds to a question, offers a comment, or tries out a new word or structure, the teacher subconsciously makes an assessment of the student's performance. Tests are a subset of assessment - only one among many procedures and tasks that teachers can ultimately use to assess students. Teaching is an overall process in which first comes assessment and then testing. Teaching sets up the practice games of language learning: the opportunities for learners to listen, think, take risks, set goals, and process feedback.

Are teachers constantly assessing students with no interaction that is assessment-free?

Topic- 080: Kinds of Testing

There are various reasons for testing which give rise to various categories of tests.

Placement Tests

These are used to place students in classes/programs which are appropriate to their level of proficiency. Usually based on syllabus and material, they define characteristics of each level of proficiency, test grammar and vocabulary knowledge, and assess students' productive and receptive skills.

Diagnostic Achievement Tests

These are used to explore learners' difficulties, gaps in their knowledge and skill deficiencies during a course. They identify students' strengths and weaknesses. Although difficult to construct, they benefit future instruction.

Progress or Achievement Tests

They are designed to measure learners' language and skills progress in relation to the syllabus they have been following, i.e. how successful students are in achieving the objectives of a lesson? Closely related to the content of a particular lesson/course/curriculum, they are often written by the teachers and given to students every few weeks to see how well they are doing. They can form part of a formative assessment. These tests only work, if they contain item types which the students are familiar with.

Proficiency Tests

These tests give a general picture of a student's knowledge and ability in a language. They are frequently used as stages people have to reach if they want to be admitted to a foreign university, get a job or obtain some kind of certificate.

Aptitude Tests

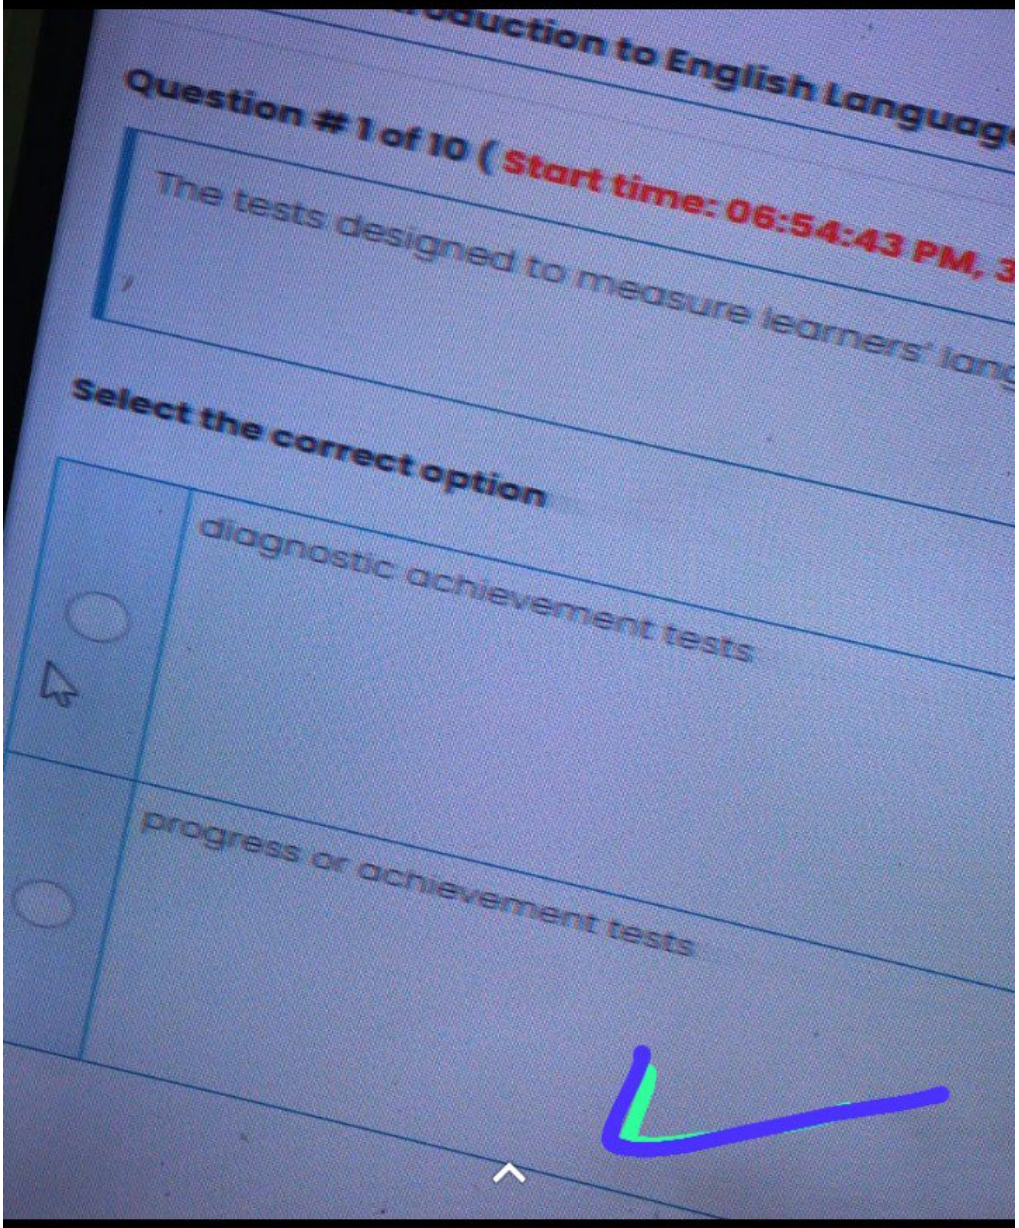

These are used to predict a person's future success in learning a foreign language. They are usually taken before actual learning.

Language Dominance Tests

These are used to assess bilingual learners' relative strength in two or more languages. Portfolio Assessment: It has many benefits - provides evidence of students' efforts; helps students become more autonomous and self-monitor their own learning. It has clear validity since students have a chance to edit before submitting their work and has an extremely positive wash back effect.

Proficiency Tests

These tests give a general picture of a student's knowledge and ability in a language. They are frequently used as stages people have to reach if they want to be admitted to a foreign university, get a job or obtain some kind of certificate.

Aptitude Tests

These are used to predict a person's future success in learning a foreign language. They are usually taken before actual learning.

Language Dominance Tests

These are used to assess bilingual learners' relative strength in two or more languages. Portfolio Assessment: It has many benefits - provides evidence of students' efforts; helps students become more autonomous and self-monitor their own learning. It has clear validity since students have a chance to edit before submitting their work and has an extremely positive wash back effect.
