

Genres

Conventional text types distinguished by typical content and internal organization. Genres may constrain verbal form or style in specific ways, such as the use of agentless passives in scientific articles.

Speech Events

Speech Events Instances of communication that are realized through genres. These events are characterized by their specific contexts and purposes.

Communicative Conventions

Rules and norms that regulate how conversation is conducted, including turn-taking, appropriate timing, and strategies for getting the floor.

Conversational Styles

Distinctive ways of engaging in conversation that reflect cultural, gender, or individual differences. These styles can be cooperative, supportive, competitive, or hierarchical.

Authentic Self

The concept that an individual's actions should align with their inner desires and truths, rather than external cultural norms.

Agency

The capacity of individuals to act intentionally and shape their desires and norms through practice.

Cultural Norms

Shared expectations and rules that guide behavior within a society.

Performative Identity

The concept that identity is created through repeated actions rather than pre-existing the actions.

Standpoint Theory

A feminist theory that emphasizes the importance of women's perspectives and experiences in scholarship.

Radical Feminism

A feminist movement that argues for the essential superiority of women's nature and challenges traditional gender roles.

Asymmetry

Asymmetry is a lack of equality or balance between two or more elements, leading to an uneven distribution or disparity.

 Tomboy

A tomboy is a girl who exhibits behaviors and interests traditionally associated with boys, such as preferring sports or rough play.

 Taboo

Taboo is a social or cultural prohibition or restriction against certain behaviors, practices, or discussions considered inappropriate or unacceptable.

 Gender Ideology

Gender ideology is a system of beliefs and attitudes about the roles, behaviors, and expectations associated with different genders.

 Gender Essentialism

Gender essentialism is the belief that men and women possess inherent characteristics and behaviors that define their gender, often based on biological or natural differences.

 Habitus

Habitus is a set of habits, dispositions, and ways of thinking shaped by one's social environment and experiences.

 Hegemony

Hegemony is the dominance of one group or state over others, often maintained through cultural, ideological, or political influence

 Sarcasm

Sarcasm is a form of verbal irony where someone says the opposite of what they truly mean, typically to mock, criticize, or convey contempt.

 Gender Stereotype

Gender stereotype is a generalized belief about the characteristics, roles, and behaviors typically associated with men and women.

 Archetype

Archetype is the original pattern or model of which all things of the same type are representations or copies.

 Power dynamics

Power dynamics refer to the ways in which power is distributed and exercised within relationships, groups, or organizations.

 Grammatical Gender

Grammatical gender is a linguistic category that classifies nouns, pronouns, and adjectives into classes based on their association with masculine, feminine, or neuter forms. It influences agreement and usage within a language.

Rapport Talk (Women)

Rapport talk is a communication style typically associated with women that focuses on building relationships, sharing personal experiences, and fostering connection. It emphasizes empathy and emotional support.

Report Talk (Men)

Report talk is a communication style often linked to men that aims to convey information, assert knowledge, and achieve specific outcomes. It is more focused on sharing facts and solving problems.

Patriarchy

Patriarchy is a social system where men hold primary power and authority in political, economic, and familial structures, often leading to the dominance of men over women and reinforcing traditional gender roles.

Critical Discourse Analysis

Critical Discourse Analysis is an approach to studying language that examines how discourse (spoken or written communication) reflects, reinforces, or challenges power structures and social inequalities in society.

Sex Stereotypes

Sex stereotypes are preconceived and often rigid beliefs about the characteristics, roles, and behaviors appropriate for individuals based on their sex. These stereotypes can perpetuate traditional gender roles and inequalities.

Socio-Cultural Anthropology

Socio-Cultural Anthropology is the study of human societies and cultures, focusing on understanding social practices, norms, and cultural beliefs through participant observation and ethnographic research.

Community of Practice

A Community of Practice is a group of people who share a common interest or profession and engage in collective learning through regular interaction and collaboration. This community supports the development of shared knowledge and skills.

Naturalization

Naturalization is the process by which social practices, behaviors, or ideas become accepted as natural or normal, often obscuring their constructed nature and making them appear as inherent aspects of life.

Transgenderism

Transgenderism is the condition or identity of individuals whose gender identity differs from the sex they were assigned at birth. It encompasses a range of experiences and expressions of gender that are not confined to traditional binary categories.

Heterosexuality

Heterosexuality is the sexual orientation where individuals are attracted to people of the opposite sex. It is often considered the normative sexual orientation in many societies.

Homosexuality

Homosexuality is the sexual orientation where individuals are attracted to people of the same sex. It includes both gay and lesbian orientations and challenges traditional heterosexual norms.

Sexuality

Sexuality is the complex spectrum of human sexual orientation, preferences, identity, and behavior. It encompasses how individuals experience and express their sexual desires and attractions.

Gendered culture

It is "a culture in which 'the structures of masculinity and femininity are central to the formation of society as a whole,' a culture in which 'the intimate and structural expressions of social life are divided according to gender'".

Conventionally polite requests

They are questions constituted by modals and subject-auxiliary inversion. They may also include rising intonation, formulaic expressions, tag-type questions, and prerequisites.

Directives framed as joint activity

They are constituted by suggestions, which are statements mitigated by modals, hedges, and/or subjectivizers.

Minimized imperatives

They are mitigated by the lexical items Just, little, and real quick. They generally save the face of the other through non-imposition. They are mitigated, but not to the extent of requests and suggestions.

Statements of need/obligation

Statements of need/obligation which attribute the source of the directive to exigencies of the situation, are constituted by expressions of need and modals of obligation. They are mitigated, but not to the extent of requests and suggestions.

Unmitigated imperatives

They are neither mitigated nor aggravated. They are neutral in terms of face.

Impersonalized directives

They frame the need for the directive as external to the speaker and addressee by framing the directive as a general rule through assertions of what the addressee will or will not do, or through avoidance of "I" and "you" by inclusive points of view, agent deletion, general you, existentials, and passives.

Aggravated directives

They are constituted by various forms, but are aggravated by linguistic structures or prosodic elements that increase the force of the directive.

Uptalk

Ending sentences with an upward inflection that makes it seem like you're asking a question is known as uptalk.

Ordinary linguistics

It is the branch that provides theories and descriptions of structured language systems such as syntactic relations and pronunciation processes.

Extraordinary linguistics

This branch involves the explicit and detailed characterization of the actual utterances of people situated in real social contexts. It relies on standard linguistic accounts of the language systems in which those utterances are cast.

Variants in intonation

They are defined as alternative ways of performing basic intonational contours.

High-rise intonational pattern

It ends with a rising terminal reaching a level higher than earlier parts of the utterance and is perceived as incomplete or questioning.

Low-rise intonational pattern

It is also known as the fall-rise. It is heard as having a definite rising terminal, but it is not perceived as incomplete or questioning like the high-rise.

Community of Practice (CofP)

It refers to ‘a set of relations among persons, activity, and world, over time and in relation with other tangential and overlapping communities of practice’. The COP approach focuses on what members do - the practice or activities which indicate that they belong to the group, and also the extent to which relations which underlie their practice.

 Social Practice

Typically stated as a human activity that refers to repeated behaviors and actions shaped by cultural norms and social structures.

 Masculinity

It refers to the qualities, behaviors, and roles traditionally associated with being male, shaped by cultural and social expectations.

 Femininity

It refers to the qualities, behaviors, and roles traditionally associated with being female, shaped by cultural and social expectations. These traits can differ across cultures and contexts.

 Reproduce

It refers to the process of maintaining or replicating social structures, norms, and behaviors across generations.

 Constructing selves

This refers to the process by which individuals develop their identities through interactions with social, cultural, and environmental factors. It involves actively shaping one's sense of self-based on experiences, relationships, and societal expectations.

 Speech activities

They refer to the forms of communication that occur in social contexts. These activities include conversations, debates, storytelling, giving instructions, or any spoken exchanges, and are shaped by cultural norms.

 Power

It refers to the ability to influence, control, or shape interactions, behaviors, and social structures through communication

 Cultural similarity

It refers to the shared beliefs, values, practices, and customs that are common between different groups or societies. It highlights the commonalities in behaviors, traditions, and social norms that foster understanding and connection across cultures.

 Third Space

The term, "third space", refers to a conceptual space where different cultural identities converge, mix, and interact, often leading to the creation of new identities or understandings distinct from the original cultures involved.

Shared Identity

This refers to a common sense of belonging or connection that individuals feel when they identify with the same group, culture, or community.