- Theories of Stratification: These are ideas about how society is divided into different layers or groups, like rich vs. poor, and how people's social status, wealth, or power influence their opportunities and life chances.

- Culture and Change: The way culture evolves over time, as societies experience new ideas, technologies, or interactions with other cultures.

- Political Organization: How a society is structured in terms of power and authority, including systems like governments, leaders, and the laws that regulate behavior.

- Psychology and Culture: The study of how people's thoughts, emotions, and behaviors are influenced by the culture they belong to, such as how culture shapes people's mental health or decision-making.

- Ideology and Culture: Ideology refers to a set of beliefs or ideas that influence the way people view the world. Culture shapes these ideas and beliefs, and in turn, these beliefs shape culture.

- Associations, Cultures, and Societies: These terms refer to the groups or organizations people form (like clubs or communities) and how they are shaped by shared cultural practices, values, and social structures.

- Race, Ethnicity, and Culture: Race refers to physical traits like skin color, while ethnicity refers to cultural factors such as language, traditions, and heritage. Both race and ethnicity influence cultural identity and experiences.

- Culture and Beliefs: Culture includes the shared beliefs, values, and traditions of a group of people, and how these beliefs shape their behavior and worldview.

- Local or Indigenous Knowledge: The traditional knowledge passed down by indigenous communities, based on their experiences and understanding of the natural world, environment, and social practices.

- Anthropology and Development: Anthropology is the study of humans and their cultures. When connected with development, it looks at how cultural practices influence development, like social progress or economic growth in different societies.

- Cultural Anthropology and Art: Cultural anthropology looks at how culture influences people's ways of life, including art. Art reflects cultural values, beliefs, and traditions, so it's an important part of understanding culture.

- Ethics in Anthropology: Ethics in anthropology refers to the moral guidelines researchers follow when studying people and cultures, ensuring respect, honesty, and fairness in their work.

- Relevance of Cultural Anthropology: Cultural anthropology is important because it helps us understand the diverse ways people live around the world, how cultures change, and how to solve problems that affect societies. It helps us appreciate and respect cultural differences.
