

ENG506

1. World Englishes and Language Acquisition: This refers to the study of how people around the world learn English, including how it differs in different countries and cultures. It looks at how English is acquired and used by speakers in different regions.
2. Applied Theory and World Englishes: This involves using theories about language to understand how English is used in different parts of the world, including how people adapt English to suit their own cultures and needs.
3. Colonial Language Policy: This refers to the way English was used as a tool by colonial powers to control and influence the language of colonized countries, often replacing or suppressing local languages.
4. English in Language Policy and Planning: This involves the decisions and strategies made by governments or organizations about how English should be used in education, media, and official matters within a country.
5. New Englishes: These are new varieties of English that have developed in countries where English is not the native language, such as "Singlish" in Singapore or "Indian English" in India.
6. English in Australia and New Zealand: This refers to how English is spoken in Australia and New Zealand, including regional variations and the influence of indigenous languages and cultures.
7. Southeast Asian Englishes: This looks at the different ways English is spoken in Southeast Asia, such as in countries like Singapore, Malaysia, and the Philippines, where English has been influenced by local languages and cultures.
8. African Englishes: This refers to the various forms of English spoken across Africa, shaped by local languages and traditions. Examples include Nigerian English, Kenyan English, and South African English.
9. Emerging Englishes: These are new forms or variations of English that are developing as English spreads to new regions or as new generations of speakers adapt the language to their own contexts.
10. English of the Subcontinent: This refers to how English is spoken in the Indian subcontinent, including India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, and Nepal, where it has been shaped by local languages and cultures.
11. New Standard Englishes: These are evolving versions of English that are recognized as "standard" in certain regions, but they may have differences in grammar, vocabulary, or pronunciation from traditional English.
12. Power, Ideology, and Attitudes: This explores how people's attitudes toward different varieties of English are influenced by power, social status, and ideology. For example, some English varieties are seen as more prestigious than others.
13. World Englishes and Gender: This examines how gender influences the way English is spoken and used around the world, including differences in how men and women might speak in different English-speaking cultures.

14. The Pedagogy of World Englishes: This refers to the teaching methods used to teach different varieties of English to learners, focusing on how to respect and incorporate the diversity of English spoken worldwide.
15. Teaching World Englishes Courses: This involves creating and teaching courses that focus on the different varieties of English spoken around the world, helping students understand the global diversity of English.
16. Models, Methods, and Curriculum for Teaching World Englishes: This refers to the different approaches and plans that teachers use to teach about the various forms of English spoken around the world, including how to design courses and materials.
17. Testing and Assessment in World Englishes Context: This looks at how English proficiency is tested and assessed in a way that recognizes the diversity of English speakers and different varieties of English.
18. Role of English in Higher Education: This refers to the importance of English in universities and colleges, where it is often used as the main language of instruction, research, and communication.
19. World Englishes and Lexicography: This deals with the study of how dictionaries are created to include different varieties of English, taking into account regional vocabulary, spelling, and usage.
20. World Englishes and the Media: This looks at how different forms of English are used in the media, including TV, movies, news, and the internet, and how this reflects global language diversity.
21. Globalisation: Various Trends: This refers to the spread of English around the world due to globalization, which affects how people interact, communicate, and use English in different countries.
22. Dangers of English as a Global Language: This examines the potential negative effects of English becoming the dominant global language, such as the loss of local languages and cultures or inequality between native and non-native English speakers.
23. Future of World Englishes: This looks at how English will continue to evolve as a global language, especially as more people around the world speak English in their own unique ways.
24. Future Directions: Research in World Englishes: This refers to the future areas of study in the field of World Englishes, such as how English will change over time and how it will be taught and used in different parts of the world.

Compilation