Education according to Aristotle?

Answer:

Aristotle saw education as essential for developing virtue and reason, guiding people toward a fulfilling life. He believed it should nurture both moral character and intellectual skills, preparing individuals for active civic participation. Education, to him, was about achieving one's purpose and living ethically.

Curriculum of Aristotle?

Answer:

- Theoretical subjects
- Practical skills
- Productive skills

Disagreement and Consensus?

Answer

Disagreement:

- Where ever there are two or more people, conflict can arise through disagreement over various things of everyday life.
- Disagreement rises due to ignorance of the truth.

How is consensus achieved?

- Consensus on the important things is only achieved through the search for knowledge and truth, as it is only truth that all can agree upon.
