Q28

A bridge increases network bandwidth by segmenting a network into smaller collision domains, reducing the number of devices competing for bandwidth in each segment. This minimizes collisions and traffic congestion, allowing more efficient data transfer. Additionally, bridges filter and forward data only to the necessary segments, improving overall network performance.

some may describe the property of a planet as Day and others may use the word Daylength for that purpose. This has led to the necessity of having uniform standards for writing different types of XML documents. Many companies have agreed to follow common standards for XML tags. A file that uses XML tags is called data type definition (DTD) or XML schema.

NEED FOR REVERSE SUPPLY CHAIN About 20 % of products sold in USA are returned. The leading Technology consultancy Gartner in 2004 reported that “Improperly Handled returns erode 32-35% of potential profits of the business organizations. That number has improved after 11 years but still around 22 %. Enterprises need Reverse SC for replacing defective goods, repairing the used products, refurbishing the returned product, calling back substandard or harmful goods, disposal of product waste. There can be other direct reasons like government or third party regulatory compliance. As a matter of fact, there are more reasons like environmental awareness, government regulations on product recycling and waste disposal, growing consumerism and stiff competition Another important need being the return of new product launched. It is a sad situation that often businesses receive the setup of the customer returning the product on the pretext as the product did not deliver what it had promised to deliver.
