- Challenges include mismatched reading and speaking skills

Vocabulary Tests:

- Key tests include Bilingual Levels Tests to evaluate word knowledge.
- Challenges in distinguishing between spoken and written vocabulary

Lesson 24: Teaching Writing I

Introduction:

- Writing is complex and often avoided due to past negative experiences.
- Functional needs like forms, letters evolve into expressive writing

Principles for Teaching Writing:

- Focus on meaning, accuracy, and reinforcement.
- Encourages writing to augment grammar and vocabulary learning

Lesson 25: Teaching Writing II

Strategies for Writing:

- Importance of student motivation and engagement.
- Using writing to support spoken activities like group discussions and presentations

Challenges:

- Teaching unfamiliar genres or advanced writing skills

Lesson 26: Teaching Writing in an L2 Classroom I

Introduction:

- Writing is taught as a craft requiring practice and apprenticeship.
- Focus on both writing for learning and writing for communication

Reinforcement Writing:

- Uses grammar-based sentence construction exercises

Lesson 27: Teaching Writing in an L2 Classroom II

Purpose-Based Writing:

- Writing tasks aligned with ESL, ESP, or EFL needs.
- Focus on real-world applications like business, academic, and general communication

Lesson 28: The Writing Process I

Writing as a Process:

- Covers stages like drafting, revising, and editing.
- Encourages meaningful, language-focused, and fluency-oriented writing

Types of Writing:

Tasks include form filling, note-taking, letters, and academic writing

Lesson 29: The Writing Process II

Ideas to Text:

- Challenges include translating ideas into coherent text and fluency issues.
- Techniques: Practice forming letters, attention to spelling, and idea generation.
- Importance of reviewing to improve coherence and correct errors

Reviewing and Peer Feedback:

- Encourages collaboration for suggestions and improvements.
- Use of checklists or scales to enhance writing quality

Lesson 30: Issues of Cohesion and Coherence

Teaching Cohesion:

- Utilizes lexical repetition, grammatical cohesion, and linkers (e.g., pronouns, conjunctions).
- Includes substitution and ellipsis for brevity and connectivity

Teaching Coherence:

Reflection on Teaching:

- Teachers should reflect on their methods and incorporate their experience into course design

Lesson 37: Teaching Students to Self-Edit

Focus on Editing:

- Encourage students to identify and correct their errors.
- Address frequent, global, and stigmatizing errors

Activities:

- Peer editing, error logs, and discovery-based tasks.
- Shift responsibility from teacher to student for error correction

Lesson 38: Theoretical and Practical Issues in ESL Writing

Value of Theory:

- Theoretical knowledge helps in making informed pedagogical decisions.
- Understanding historical and philosophical foundations enhances teaching

Practical Applications:

- Combine theory with empirical research to design effective courses.
- Focus on sociopolitical and critical pedagogy issues

Lesson 39: Responding to Written Work I

Types of Feedback:

- Positive feedback to motivate and encourage.
- Diagnostic and formative feedback to address writing issues

Assessment Goals:

- Improve writing quality through constructive critique.
- Balance error correction with encouragement

Lesson 40: Responding to Written Work II

Self-Evaluation with Checklists:

- Encourages students to use checklists to self-evaluate their drafts.
- Promotes independence in identifying errors and areas for improvement

Reformulation:

- Teachers rewrite problematic sections to demonstrate better writing practices

Lesson 41: Responding to Written Work III

Feedback on Drafts:

- Feedback on preliminary drafts is formative and aids revision.
- Feedback on final drafts is summative but should guide future writing

Balancing Praise and Criticism:

- Effective feedback combines encouragement with constructive criticism.
- The "sandwich" method is often used: positive comments, suggestions, and more positive reinforcement

Lesson 42: Teaching Academic L2 Writing I

Overview of Academic L2 Writing:

- Focuses on preparing students for academic and professional writing tasks.
- Emphasizes writing formats and discourse common in academia

University Writing Requirements:

- Students need to handle diverse writing tasks in general education courses

Lesson 43: Teaching Academic L2 Writing II

Explicit Instruction:

- Involves teaching genre-specific conventions, vocabulary, and structure.
- Balances process-oriented and product-oriented approaches

Challenges in EAP Writing:

- Personal essays dominate ESL instruction but don't prepare students for academic rigor.
- Advocates for exposure to formal, hedged, and depersonalized registers

Lesson 44: Teaching Reading and Writing in the Pakistani ELT Context

Role of English in Pakistan:

- English is essential for power spheres like education and commerce.
- Challenges include inadequate proficiency among learners

Integration of Skills in the National Curriculum:

- Focuses on addressing deficiencies in English language education through improved curricula and teacher training

Lesson 45: Integrating Receptive and Productive Skills

Purpose of Integration:

- The ultimate aim of language teaching is developing autonomy in using the language across receptive (reading, listening) and productive (writing, speaking) skills.
- Skills are interconnected; for example, listening leads to speaking, and reading leads to writing

Transition Between Skills:

- Activities should include pre-, while-, and post-tasks to link skills meaningfully.
- For instance, reading a text might precede writing a summary or engaging in group discussions

Receptive Before Productive Skills:

- Emphasizes learning comprehension (listening/reading) before expression (speaking/writing).
- Exposure to language in context builds the foundation for subsequent productive activities

Skill Integration in Practice:

- Tasks should mimic real-life contexts, ensuring authenticity and engagement.
- Examples include note-taking during lectures (listening + writing) and writing based on reading materials
