Functional resume components? OR Components of Resumes? OR Elements of CV?

Whether you are writing a reverse chronological or a functional resume, you have to include the following basic components:

1) Identification
2) Career Objectives
3) Summary of Qualifications
4) Employment
5) Education
6) Professional Skills
7) Professional Affiliations

8) Military Experience
9) Optional Components
10) Portfolios
11) References
12) Personal Data

What is functional resume?

You write a functional resume when you are a non-traditional job applicant, returning to work after a gap and are not fresh graduate. You have not received education for a job and have changed jobs frequently or you plan to join a new profession. A non-traditional job applicant has to emphasize his skills as related to the job he/she is seeking and quantify his/her accomplishments. Education and experience should be given in reverse chronological order. Both provide the same content; it is only in how the organization of the content varies.

Online feedback?

Meaningful online feedback is critical to all learning environments, traditional as well as on-line. Meaningful online feedback is critical to all learning environments and improving learners' motivation. It requires a partnership and trust between learner and instructor. online feedback should serve as a learning opportunity for both the instructor and learner. Its immediacy is an important component of effective online communication. In online learning, feedback occurs between the learner and instructor in various ways. Methods of communication in eLearning include verbal and written electronic exchanges called commuter-mediated communication, such as through Skype or email.

Two Elements of Evaluation?

- Validity: It provides information on what we want to test, e.g. if we want to test our learner's presentation skills, we would not want to give them a test on business vocabulary.
- Reliability: It is the consistency with which assessment tools measure learners' ability, e.g. an assessment is reliable when there is little difference in learner's scores or in ratings across different occasions, timings, or different judges.

Formative and Summative evaluation? Long

Formative evaluation:

It Is an ongoing assessment during the learning process. Formative evaluation happens during the teaching and learning process. Its purpose is to monitor student progress and help both teachers and learners make improvements before the course ends. It is ongoing and informal.

For example: A short 5-question quiz at the end of the lesson to check understanding of that day's topic summative evaluation:

Summative evaluation happens at the end of a course or unit. It measures what the student has achieved overall and is often used for grades or certification. It is final and formal. It Focuses on outcomes and performance.

For Example: a midterm examination, and a final project.

Masculinity versus Femininity?

In masculine cultures, achievement is often measured in terms of power and wealth, and emphasis placed on work goals and assertiveness.

📘 Examples: Japan, USA, Germany

Feminine cultures see personal goals, human contact, and relationship building as more valuable.

📘 Examples: Sweden, Norway, the Netherlands

Long term orientation?

This dimension highlights differences between cultures that see short-term benefits as important (consider, for example, the way some company strategies focus on short-term profits), and those that feel that time spent developing longer-lasting relationships brings greater benefit.

Universalism versus Particularism?

The Universalist says that rules and regulations are there to be followed. The particularist would argue that it depends on the situation and people involved. The following example is somewhat simplistic, but might help to clarify the concept. If a cashier is caught stealing from the till, in a Universalist culture, he or she would probably lose their job. In a particularist culture, the fact that the person was stealing to pay for a child's education might be seen as an excuse for the behavior.

IMRD Model?

In Business English, the IMRD Model is a report-writing structure that helps organize information in a clear and logical sequence. The acronym stands for Introduction, Method, Results, and Discussion. The Introduction sets up the purpose of the report and outlines the problem or context. The Method section explains how the data was gathered or the process followed. The Results section presents the findings without interpretation, and the Discussion interprets the results by analyzing what they mean, drawing conclusions, and often making recommendations.

Traditional distance education?

Traditionally, Distance Education is paper based. Material, examinations, and assessments, and assignments use paper materials and tutor interaction with students. Most go by the name of The Open University. In Pakistan, the AIOU (Allama Iqbal Open University) and the VU (Virtual University) are the two universities which impart DE. Students are given a course pack for self-study on registration. Some DE institutions such as the Open University of Sri Lanka (OUSL) differ markedly from a conventional university in its mode of teaching, where the student on registration receives a course pack which is designed for self-study and self-learning. Students are therefore expected to work on their own responsibility. Assistance and guidance are provided by day school sessions which are held at regular intervals mostly on weekends. Typically, students will be expected to attend day school sessions, and also present themselves for the Continuous Assessment tests. It should also be noted that the program will utilize audio-visual as well as print material. Most of the texts in literature and some of the topics in language/linguistics are supported by radio and TV programs.

Benefits of distance education?

3 related concepts of ethnocentrism?

Ethnocentricity means judging other cultures based on the standards and values of your own culture. It's like thinking your culture is the best or most normal, and others are inferior or strange. Ethnicity is also related to culture. Other related and important concepts are as follows:

1) Essentialism: The assumption that groups, categories have one or several defining features/characteristics exclusive to all members of that category and that there is an essential cultural identity for each cultural group.

2) Universality: The concept that features of human life and experience exist beyond the constitutive effects of local cultural conditions.

3) A Hegemonic view: A hegemonic view of things holds that values, experiences, and expectations of a dominant group are held to be true for all humanity.

Task Based Test?

The task-based approach in language teaching helps students use language in real and meaningful ways. It gives them chances to practice speaking and writing through activities that are like real-life situations. The focus is on how well they perform and use the language. Their performance is judged based on clear criteria set before the task. It's important that the person making the task knows what the learner will need to do in real situations and who they will talk to—this also includes understanding cultural differences. Tasks should be as close to real life as possible. For example, if the learner will need to give presentations, then the student should be asked to give one for practice and assessment.

Explain Face of Politeness?

'Face of Politeness' is a technical term meaning attention paid to the self-respect of addressee and ultimately of oneself. It is about meeting a person's 'face needs' for self-respect. Not all cultures have the same idea about appropriate ways to meet face needs. 'Face of politeness' means showing respect to someone and also keeping your own self-respect.

Each person has two types of face:

1) Positive face – the need to feel liked and valued. You can respect this by giving compliments, remembering their name, or using friendly words like "we" to make them feel included. But how much people like this depends on their culture.

2) Negative face – the need to not feel pressured. When we ask someone to do something, we are putting pressure on them. To be polite, we should ask softly. For example, instead of saying "Give me that!", we can say "Could you please give that to me?" or "If it's not too much trouble…"

Intercultural training helps people communicate better with those from other cultures. It includes teaching how to use language properly in different situations and helping learners understand how culture affects communication.

There are two main opinions about who should teach this in business English classes. Some people think language teachers should only focus on language, and intercultural issues should be taught by special experts. In such cases, outside trainers are brought in to help.

Others believe language and culture are connected, and business English teachers should also teach intercultural skills, because learners will likely use English with people from different cultures or companies.

There are also two ways to look at intercultural training:

1) Culture-general approach: This teaches learners to understand what culture is, become aware of their own culture, and realize that their way is not the only way.

   It helps to:

   - Break down prejudices
   - Understand stereotypes (good and bad sides)
   - Respect other people's different views

2) Culture-specific training prepares people to work in a particular or specific culture, like when someone moves to another country. It teaches what behavior is acceptable there. Although it can be too basic, it still helps if learners understand its limits. It's more useful when the teacher knows the culture well. This training often includes general cultural lessons too. Giving training before and after the move, and also when returning home, is helpful. What the business English teacher does depends on the learners' needs.

write a note on Anglo-Saxon future plan?

Anglo-Saxons usually see projects as future plans with clear goals, steps, and deadlines. This is because they often think of time as a straight line, where one thing happens after another. But other cultures may see time differently, so they handle projects in different ways. Their goals may change based on outside factors they can't control. Still, the project can be successful because they look at the bigger picture and consider everything that might affect the project.

Legal language issues?

Legal language is required in dealing with a number of issues:

3) Pronunciation: Numbers, e.g. ‘tree’ for three, ‘fife’ for five

What is radiotelephony, and what is its role in aviation?

Radiotelephony is the use of radio waves for voice communication. In aviation, it ensures effective communication between pilots and air traffic controllers for safe navigation. Aviation English is the de facto language of civil aviation which is called Radiotelephony; it is a specialized communication between pilots and air traffic controllers, and other personnel associated with the aviation industry, like flight attendants, crew, mechanics and engineers. The difference with other forms of communication is that radiotelephony is carried out over radio frequencies and there is no face to-face communication between the interlocutors. It is a hybrid language - a combination of a restricted, specialized, technical language and conventional English /other languages.

Activities of teaching business English in online environment?

Teaching BE in an online environment can be quite different than teaching in a classroom. Teaching online requires specific competencies and skills associated with effective online course teaching and facilitation. Before your online course begins, it is important that you feel confident using the tools in the online learning environment and that you become familiar with how the course is set up.

The following are some of the key activities to consider:

- ❖ Create an effective course outline that communicates course expectations
- ❖ Create guidelines of online behavior, and course organization
- ❖ Effectively use the learning management system (LMS) and other technologies selected to support the course, including Microsoft Office and Adobe Acrobat
- ❖ Possess an understanding of copyright and intellectual property issues in using content in an online course

Advantages of Authenticity materials?

Authentic materials are "texts, audio, or visuals created for real-life communication purposes, not specifically for language teaching." Examples include news articles, emails, company reports, podcasts, and advertisements.

Advantages of Authentic Materials:

- Real-World Relevance
- Motivation and Engagement
- Cultural Awareness
- Rich Vocabulary and Structure
- Skill Integration

Importance of in-groups?

In-groups, like family, have strong bonds and affect how people behave for their whole lives. For example, the university someone goes to can shape how they think and act. In-groups are important in social life, and people focus more on working together than on personal goals. Different cultures communicate in different ways. Asians are often seen as shy and quiet, while Westerners may seem bold and self-centered to others.

stages in a business negotiation?

1) Preparation includes the following points:
   - Assessing power
   - Establishing specific needs/objectives
   - Sorting out options
   - Defining issues

- Setting positions
- Finding out the bottom-line need of the other party

2) Relationship building
3) Information gathering

How can you deal with cultural biases, color, animals and puns, humor in multicultural communication?

In multicultural communication, it's important to be culturally sensitive and respectful to avoid misunderstandings. Different cultures may interpret colors, animals, humor, or wordplay (puns) differently, so we must be careful with how we use them.

To deal with cultural biases, avoid making generalizations or assumptions about any group. Always use inclusive and neutral language. For example, avoid stereotypes or biased examples related to gender, religion, or ethnicity.

When using colors, be aware that colors carry different meanings in different cultures. For instance, Colors have different connotations in cultures, e.g. the colors red and black especially have negative and positive connotations in Eastern and Western cultures. white means purity in some cultures but mourning in others. Choose colors wisely, especially in presentations or marketing materials.

Animal references can also be confusing or offensive. An animal that symbolizes strength in one culture might be seen as dirty or unlucky in another. So, it's best to avoid using animal idioms or symbols unless you're sure they're appropriate.

Puns and humor are risky in multicultural settings. Wordplay often does not translate well and may confuse or offend people from different language backgrounds. Use humor carefully and only when you're sure it's respectful and understood by all.

What is meant by Backwash and how is it achieved?

When the course is designed with the test in mind, its effect is called washback. It may also be called backwash, test impact, and measurement-driven instruction, alignment with course objectives and test feedback. Washback, according to Brown and Hudson, is "the effect of testing and assessment on the language teaching curriculum that is related to it". While Hughes (2003) says that washback is used to refer to the influence that a test has on teaching and learning.

Washback can be positive or negative.

- Positive washback happens when the test matches the course goals and helps students learn useful skills.

- Negative washback happens when the test is different from the course goals. For example, testing writing skills through MCQs makes students focus on MCQs instead of writing.

To get positive washback, tests should match what is taught in the course. Teachers and students should understand the test, and teachers should get support. If a test causes stress or doesn't fit course goals, it leads to negative washback, like cramming or only teaching to the test.

5 strategy and considerations to keep in mind during the course?

1) Teach students about online learning and help them to connect materials with their own personal learning styles.
2) Maintain frequent contact with students.
3) Effectively and efficiently manage and administer the course.
4) Be sensitive to disabilities / diversities and respect various ways of learning.
5) Encourage students to respect the course schedule and assignment submission due dates.
6) Provide students with meaningful feedback on their assignments and participation in a timely fashion.
7) Create ongoing opportunities for reflection, critical analysis, and self-exploration.

How a Teacher Can Manage Information Overload in Personalized Learning?

In personalized learning, students often access a large amount of digital content, resources, and tasks based on their individual needs. This can lead to information overload, where students feel overwhelmed. To manage this, the teacher plays a key role in organizing, filtering, and guiding the learning process.

The teacher should:

1) Set clear learning goals
2) Break content into small, manageable chunks
3) Use a structured learning plan
4) Recommend only relevant and useful resources
5) Encourage self-monitoring and reflection
6) Use digital tools wisely
7) Provide regular feedback and support

What is task-based assessment?

Task-based assessments are therefore designed to reflect real-life situations. They focus on performance and language. Task-based assessment is helpful because it uses real-life situations based on what learners need. For example, if business English students need to give presentations at work, they can be asked to give one during the test. A list of important points should be made to check during the assessment. The interview can be done in English, another language, or a mix, depending on the language level of both people.

Diagnostic tests?

Diagnostic tests are used to find out students' weaknesses. Sometimes, they are made specially for a company or organization. The results can be compared with skill levels, like those from CEF (Common European Framework (of Reference for Languages)) or ACTFL (American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages). These tests help check if a person is a basic, independent, or advanced user. They help teachers see what students can do, what they need, and place them in the right learning group.

Silence view in different culture? OR How silence is viewed in Cliff cultures?

Culture can be analyzed by using a number of dimensions. Five areas are usually seen in differentiating culture. The first one looks into how silence is viewed in different cultures. In some cultures, silence is favored, e.g. in Finns and Asians. In others, it is viewed as a breakdown in conversation leading interlocutors to get uncomfortable in some and to endeavor to fill up the silence. In some societies, silence is important. It is a way to guard your individuality and ward against the fear of someone changing your opinion. This refers to a frequent conversational goal in Western societies for each person to check out his sense of reality (or point of view) against that of other people in the conversation. Part of this checking out may result in encouraging others to change their point of view which, in some cultures means a disrespect of other's rights. Sometimes it is viewed as a way of being with others. In some societies, people don't talk unless they are introduced.

Explain Neutral versus Emotional b. Specific versus Diffuse c. Status d. Relationship with Nature?

Neutral vs Emotional:

This point explains how people show emotions in different situations. In a neutral culture, people feel proud of staying calm and controlling their emotions, even when things are confusing or stressful. They believe it is good to keep feelings inside and stay professional. In an emotional culture, people openly express their feelings. People like to show their emotions, even suddenly or without thinking, at work. It is considered normal and acceptable to express feelings in such cultures.

Specific vs Diffuse:

In specific cultures, people see work life and personal life as two different things. Work is not affected by personal relationships. In these cultures, the relationship between managers and workers depends only on the work situation. The 'at-work' relationship is different from the 'outside-work' relationship. In diffuse cultures, people think work and personal life are connected. Personal relationships are important to achieve business goals. People like to spend time with colleagues and clients outside of work too. In such cultures, the relationship is always present, and business can be discussed anytime and anywheres.

Status:

Different cultures give importance to status in different ways. Simply, in Japan, age is respected, and people give value to seniors. In the US, success and achievement are considered more important. The idea of ascription is understood differently in cultures. Some people believe that a person should be respected for who they are. In these cultures, power, title, education, and position are important, and these things decide how people behave with others. In cultures where achievement is more valued, people believe that a person's worth depends on what they do. In such cultures, people respect performance and work results, no matter who the person is.

Relationship with Nature:

Some cultures believe that people can control the environment around them. Others believe that people are a part of nature and must adjust to their environment. This belief affects how people accept new technology and how they make work plans. In cultures that believe people can control nature, they try to change their surroundings to reach their goals. In other cultures, people believe that nature and the environment control them, so they must work with the environment to succeed. At work, such people focus on adjusting to others, avoiding conflict, and needing support from their team.

Elements which define the environment in which employees work?

The culture of a company or organization is the personality of a company. It defines the environment in which employees work. It includes a variety of elements:

- Work environment
- Company mission
- Values, ethics
- Expectations, goals

Essential Business Skills for Management?

- Communication Skills
- Decision-Making Skills
- Leadership
- Team Management
- Problem-Solving Skills
- Negotiation Skills

Types of Requests in Professional Communication?

- Information requests
- action requests
- permission requests
- Routine Requests
- Favorable Requests

Mitigation and requests?

Mitigation and requests are debated topics in aviation communication. These strategies help people get their tasks done. Requests are made to the pilot when something unwanted or unexpected needs to be asked. Requests are also made to the air traffic controller when it seems their workload has increased. The rules about language are made by ICAO (International Civil Aviation Organization), but how much these rules are actually followed needs more research. The use of language that is not part of the official rules, like using extra words to explain meaning or to help complete tasks together, is still a question when it comes to safety.

Testing Writing Skills?

Testing of writing skills can be carried out by using the following:

- Non-weighted rubric
- Weighted rubric
- Holistic rubric

high-context and low context culture?

In high-context cultures, people use the situation itself to communicate. They don't need to explain everything clearly because others can understand from the surroundings or situation. They often use body language, value long-term relationships, and prefer talking instead of writing. In low-context cultures, people explain things clearly and directly. They don't like confusion. Outsiders can easily become part of the group because everything is said openly. Business managers from low-context cultures prefer long, detailed written contracts and strictly follow them once signed. For a high-context manager, a contract is just a guideline that can be changed if needed, because being flexible is more important. For example, if a guest arrives after a long trip, a high-context host will suggest rest without being asked, while a low-context host will wait for the guest to say they are tired before offering rest.

What is a memo? Why are memos more effective than emails?

A memo (short for memorandum) is a short, formal written message used for communication within an organization. It is typically used to share important information, make announcements, give instructions, or remind staff about policies or procedures.

Memos are More Effective than Emails because of its Formal Tone, Clarity, Structure and Permanent Record.

Importance of telephone?

This method is easy to use because no technical skills are needed. It is also cheaper than other ways of communication. This is especially helpful in companies where teachers often help first, like suggesting the right word or explaining ideas. Teachers and students can use the telephone to talk about problems with assignments, plans, or learning topics. They can also use the phone to discuss customers' needs and give feedback. Using the phone like this helps create real conversations, which are very important for good language learning. The communication happens live, as both sides talk in real time. It also gives learning chances through real use of language, where teachers and students can use the company's intranet and access real materials. Teaching through the telephone is common, but mobile phones are also becoming popular. The SMS feature of mobiles can be used for distance learning. Sending text messages is increasing every month. This fast growth is creating many businesses uses and research interest. Using mobile SMS along with live calls can create a classroom-like situation.

Bad news letter?

The bad news letter also starts with an introduction which is a buffer. It avoids telling why you are writing. In discussion after giving the bad news, quantifiable evidence is given as background to the situation. The conclusion gives future hope, while sounding upbeat and positive.

📘 Examples:

- Rejecting a job application
- Refusing a request or proposal

Explain Peer and self-Assessment?

Peer assessment is when students evaluate each other's work using clear criteria given by the teacher. It encourages learners to think critically.

Example:
After a presentation, students give feedback to their classmate on things like clarity, confidence, vocabulary use, and structure.

Benefits:

- Encourages teamwork and responsibility
- Improves communication and listening skills
- Helps students learn from one another

Self-assessment is when a student evaluates their own performance or learning. They reflect on their strengths, weaknesses, and progress using checklists, rubrics, or reflection questions.

Example:
A student fills out a form after a writing task, rating their own grammar, vocabulary, and clarity.

Benefits:

- Builds self-awareness and independence
- Encourages goal setting and motivation
- Helps students take responsibility for their learning

Explain EMP for Nursing?

Business English for Nursing is a new area in ESP that focuses on how nurses use English in hospitals and nursing education. Most books help native English-speaking nurses, but less attention is given to international students and immigrants in English-speaking countries.

Needs analysis shows that nursing students face academic, language, cultural, and nursing-specific challenges. ESL students struggle with understanding medical terms, cultural differences, and communication styles.

Academic skills needed include reading textbooks, listening to lectures, note-taking, preparing for exams, discussing topics, asking questions, writing research papers, and thinking critically.

Nursing-specific skills include making care plans, charting, giving reports during shift changes, asking patients questions, speaking confidently, and using therapeutic communication.

Cultural skills are also important. ESL students often struggle with Western expectations like speaking up and participating actively. Silence or hesitation may wrongly be seen as lack of knowledge. Cultural differences on topics like mental health and death also cause confusion.

What is the role of teacher in distance education?

Even though students study on their own in a Distance Education (DE) program, the teacher's role is still important. The teacher gives guidance, support, and helps create learning materials. One way teachers help is by making wrap-around materials—short written texts that replace what a teacher would say in a classroom. These materials are written in a friendly, simple way and sometimes include short stories. Their purpose is to motivate students, show learning options, explain what is important, and give study tips. Sometimes, these materials can also be written in the student's own language.

Explain concept of 'thanks and apology' don't really fit all cultures?

The concept of 'at a loss for words and concepts encoded by the English words 'thanks and apology' don't really fit all cultures. In some places, saying 'thanks' is normal and expected, but in other cultures, it feels unusual or different. Saying thanks is done differently in different parts of the world.

In Western cultures, saying thanks is common and polite. But in Japan, the culture focuses more on duties and obligations. There, saying thanks can feel more like saying sorry, because when someone helps you, it is seen as your responsibility to repay them. So, saying thanks is like saying, "I owe you." In Japanese culture, saying sorry and saying thanks both show that you recognize what the other person has done for you.

- Setting objectives
- Needs Analysis
- Material Development

pitfall of task-based assessment?

- ❖ Subjective Scoring
- ❖ Unequal Participation
- ❖ Time-Consuming
- ❖ Limited Coverage of Grammar and Vocabulary
- ❖ Performance Anxiety

Explain Pre-course and In-course tests?

A pre-course test (also called a placement test or diagnostic test) is given before the course begins to check a learner's current level, strengths, and weaknesses in English. Its Purpose is to understand what students already know and place them in the correct level or group.

Example:
Before starting a Business English course, learners may be asked to write an email or take a grammar test to assess their current skills.

An in-course test is given during the course, often after a unit or module, to check how much the learner has understood so far. Its Purpose is to measure ongoing progress and identify areas needing improvement.

Example:
After a lesson on presentations, learners may give a short business talk to be assessed on fluency, vocabulary, and organization.

Objectives in teaching writing?

- To improve writing skills for reports and correspondence (This will vary according to the needs of the particular group e.g. for secretaries, managers).
- To develop appropriate style.
- To improve knowledge of standard structures and phrases used for reports, documents.
- To practice writing, get feedback on strengths/weaknesses, especially with a view to check accuracy and effectiveness.

how paragraphs and sentences work together? Two principles

1) Coherence: It involves creating a logical argument or a sequence which makes sense to the reader. Activities can include jumbled up paragraphs and sentences
2) Cohesion: It is about how sentences connect with each other to form a sense of unity. Various grammatical devices, such as conjunctions, pronouns, lexical items work for cohesion.

Scanable Resumes?

Most companies use computers to check resumes. This is called electronic applicant tracking. The computer scans the resume and looks for important words like job titles, skills, and company terms. It reads the resume as an image first, then uses artificial intelligence to find the key words. If the resume has the right words, it is sent to the right department. This helps the company find the best match for the job.

Effective Resume?

An effective résumé is a well-organized, clear, and concise document that highlights your qualifications, skills, and experiences in a way that matches the job you are applying for. Its goal is to impress the employer and help you get selected for an interview.

There are some useful tips for writing an effective resume. Use good quality paper and fonts like Helvetica or Courier. Your name should be at the top of the page. Use the space bar to leave white space. Don’t center the text. Use asterisks (*) and hyphens (-) to make bullet points and lines. It's important to use key words like job titles, skills, responsibilities, and common company terms. These help when the resume is read by a computer scanner (OCR), which looks for these words to match you with the right job.

Personal Learning Environments (PLE)?

A Personal Learning Environment (PLE) refers to the tools, resources, and strategies that a learner uses to control and manage their own learning. Instead of relying only on a classroom or a teacher, students in a PLE can choose what, how, and when they want to learn, often using digital tools and online content. n a PLE, the learner chooses what to study, when to study, and how to study.

Examples:

- Using YouTube for grammar tutorials
- Joining a Facebook group for Business English learners

Corpus Based Materials?

Corpora are large collections of real-life language examples. They help find the most common business words. These words can be single words (like "market"), combinations of words (like "business plan"), phrases (like "annual report"), or short forms (like "CEO"). By studying corpora, teachers can find these important words and include them in business English courses. Teaching these common words first can help students learn faster and better. Corpora give real examples from real business communication, so they work like a useful database that helps make learning quicker and more effective.
