Particularized conversational implicatures, however, are derived from a particular context, rather than from the use of the words alone. These result from the maxim of relation. That is, the speaker assumes the hearer will search for the relevance of what is said and derive an intended meaning. For example:

A: You're out of coffee.

B: Don't worry there's a shop on the corner.

influences in the communities. Ways of Thinking about Culture.

As Piller (2012) points out, the idea of "a culture" is an ideological construction; that is, there are other ways that people might be organized and categorized besides culture. One this construction in the ways that "cultures" vary in time, space, and scale. There are cultures of cities, states, countries, and even continents or subcontinents. The idea of what culture depends on the ideologies and politics of the moment. Piller's (2012: 8) three-way division:

(1) Comparative analyses of two or more cultures.

(2) Analyses of interactions between speakers from different cultural backgrounds.

(3) The discursive creation of culture.

Pragmatics and CDA (I)

Topic-01: Pragmatics and CDA history

Pragmatics is the study of meaning in relation to the context in which a person is speaking or writing. This includes social, situational and textual context. It also includes background knowledge context; that is, what people know about each other and about the world. Pragmatics assumes that when people communicate with each other they normally follow some kind of cooperative principle; that is, they have a shared understanding of how they should cooperate in their communications. The relationship between linguistic form and communicative

Topic-02: Hymes and Pragmatics

Hymes, a key theorist in Pragmatics, proposed the concept of 'commun competence'. This is based on the connection between speech and social relations can be seen as performance/ competence/speaking model of language. Hymes formulated it as a response to Noam Chomsky's division of competence vs performance. Linguistic competence is the system of linguistic knowledge possessed by native speakers of a language. It is in contrast to the concept of Linguistic performance, the way the language system is used in communication. Linguistic competence is innate. Linguistic competence underlies linguistic performance. A speaker still has his linguistic competence even he does not speak. Communicative competence

Topic-03: Existential Presuppositions and Framing

We need to distinguish between existential presuppositions and lexical choices. Existential presupposition merely presupposes the existence of something. Lexical choices frame the said 'something' and the referent in particular ways. The two interact in conjunction to evoke ideological beliefs.

Example: '. . . . stop nagging about his work'.

assumptions about the way discourse operates in general, so it is a presupposition about presuppositions, such as 'Felicity's condition'. People have reasons for their behavior, inc' communicative behavior. It is at this level that people's 'theories of mind' oper. assumptions about how to 'decode' and understand other people's feelings and thoughts.

The pragmatic meta-level is about procedural knowledge (how to 'make sense' of discourse and the world) – see van Dijk (2003: 90) on types of knowledge. Presupposition analysis is crucial for uncovering naturalized ideologies underlying discourse, and examining manipulative functions of discourse, especially, strategies making it socially or cognitively harder to challenge ideological assumptions.
