Q: Relationship btw quality education and environment education.

ANS:

Quality	Environment
Quality education enables people to develop all of their attributes and skills to achieve their potential as human beings and members of society.	Environmental education is a process that allows individuals to explore environmental issues, engage in problem solving, and take action to improve the environment.
Quality education provides the foundation for equity in society.	Knowledge and understanding of the environment and environmental challenges

Q: Implementation of environment education.

ANS: Environmental education is a process that allows individuals to explore environmental issues, engage in problem solving, and take action to improve the environment. As a result, individuals develop a deeper understanding of environmental issues and have the skills to make informed and responsible decisions.

Q: Demand side pressures.

ANS: In many countries, education is viewed as an important way to gain social and economic advancement. Therefore, the demand for education is high, and if governments cannot afford to provide and fund quality education, then parent seeks private suppliers. This type of demand is 'excess demand', over and above what is provided by the government. In addition, many parents want for their children an education different from that offered in public schools. This is 'differentiated demand' and it may encourage privatization across all three sectors.

Q: Systematic research and population studies.

ANS: Systematic research – investigations that might survey, for example the relevant literature concerning the nature of the learner and his learning context.

Population education is not an attempt to develop a new discipline. Although demography and folk demography form the core of knowledge needed for population education, they do not cover the whole range of issues involved.
