Here Are the Answers Of Short Questions:

1. CALP

Cognitive Academic Language Proficiency (CALP) refers to the ability to use language for academic purposes. It involves complex cognitive skills such as critical thinking, problem-solving, and analytical reasoning. CALP is essential for success in academic settings.

2. ZPD

The Zone of Proximal Development (ZPD) is a concept developed by Lev Vygotsky. It refers to the range of knowledge that learners can access with guidance. ZPD is the gap between what learners can do independently and what they can do with support.

3. Inner Speech/Private Speech

Inner speech refers to the internal dialogue we have with ourselves. Private speech, on the other hand, is the external expression of our thoughts, often in a self-directed manner. Both inner and private speech play a crucial role in cognitive development and language acquisition.

4. Power Domain

The power domain refers to the social context and relationships that influence language use. It involves the dynamics of power and control, shaping how language is used and perceived. Understanding the power domain is essential for effective communication.

5. Scaffolding

Scaffolding is a teaching technique that provides temporary support and guidance to learners. It helps build confidence and competence, gradually releasing responsibility to the learner. Scaffolding is essential for language development and learning.

6. Task Naturalness

Task naturalness refers to the degree to which a language task reflects real-life communication. Authentic tasks promote engagement and motivation, mirroring everyday language use. Task naturalness is crucial for language learning and practice.

7. Idiosyncratic Dialect

An idiosyncratic dialect is a unique language variety used by an individual or group. It can include peculiar vocabulary, grammar, and pronunciation. Idiosyncratic dialects reflect personal identity and cultural background.

8. Surface Structure

Surface structure refers to the literal or explicit meaning of language. It involves the words, phrases, and sentences we use to convey meaning. Surface structure is essential for effective communication.

9. Deep Structure

Deep structure refers to the underlying or implied meaning of language. It involves the intended meaning, tone, and context. Deep structure is crucial for understanding language beyond its literal meaning.

10. Fossilization

Fossilization occurs when language errors or habits become permanent. It can happen due to overuse or reinforcement, making it challenging to correct. Fossilization can hinder language development and communication.

11. Language Awareness

Language awareness refers to understanding the nature and functions of language. It involves recognizing language structures, vocabulary, and usage. Language awareness is essential for effective communication and language teaching.

12. Sociocultural Theory

Sociocultural theory posits that language development is influenced by social and cultural factors. It emphasizes the role of culture, context, and social interactions in shaping language use and acquisition. Sociocultural theory is crucial for understanding language diversity.

13. Affective Domain

The affective domain refers to the emotional and attitudinal aspects of language learning. It involves motivation, interest, and enjoyment. A positive affective domain promotes language development and engagement.

14. Piagetian Theory

Piagetian theory, developed by Jean Piaget, posits that language development is influenced by cognitive development and constructivism. It emphasizes the role of active learning, discovery, and problem-solving in language acquisition. Piagetian theory is essential for understanding language development.

15. Intrinsic Motivation

Intrinsic motivation refers to personal interest and enjoyment driving language learning. It involves a genuine desire to learn and improve. Intrinsic motivation promotes engagement, persistence, and language development.

16. Socio Cultural Theory

Socio-cultural theory posits that language development is influenced by social and cultural factors. It emphasizes the role of culture, context, and social interactions in shaping language use and acquisition. Socio-cultural theory is crucial for understanding language diversity.

17. Extrinsic Motivation

Extrinsic motivation refers to external rewards or pressures driving language learning. It involves incentives, grades, or social expectations. Extrinsic motivation can promote language learning but may not lead to long-term engagement.

18. Different Types of Instructions (Definitions)

Direct instruction involves explicit teaching, while indirect instruction involves implicit teaching. Inductive instruction involves discovery learning, where learners construct their own knowledge. Understanding different instruction types is essential for effective teaching.

19. Universal Grammar (UG)

Universal Grammar (UG), proposed by Noam Chomsky, refers to the innate ability to acquire language. It involves a genetic predisposition to develop language rules and structures. UG is essential for understanding language acquisition and development.
