Moreover, the DHA distinguishes between three dimensions that constitute textual meanings and structures: the topics that are spoken/ written about; the discursive strategies employed; and the linguistic means that are drawn upon to realize both topics and strategies (e.g. argumentative strategies, topoi, presuppositions – see below for an extensive discussion).

or how many a single sentence contains, but there are clues. Generally, intonation units:

- begin with faster speech, and end with slower speech
- include a single pitch word
- end with a pitch boundary

Intonation units and emotion

Individual speakers alter the number of intonation units they use. Some of this is based on individual patterns and habits, but speakers also alter intonation units based on emotion. A faster speaker will generally use fewer intonation units and may be seen as being more urgent, frantic, excited, and anxious. A slower speaker may have more intonation units and may be perceived as being more emphatic, determined, and insistent. Of course, these are the extremes, and most people normally speak somewhere in the middle range.

Elements of intonation units

Sentences can often be broken up into multiple intonation units. Each intonation unit usually has a single pitch word and ends in a pitch boundary. Each pitch word conveys information to the listener, and each pitch boundary helps organize how speakers take turns speaking.

Similar sentences can have a different number of intonation units. The end of each intonation unit is marked with a hash (/) and the pitch words are bolded. Notice that the speaker with fewer intonation units spoke faster, with fewer pauses, and with fewer changes in pitch during the statement. The sentence with more intonation units sounds more emphatic and deliberate about what is being said. More intonation units can cause the entire conversation to occur more slowly.

of corpus data so that appropriate claims can be made from the analyses that are based on it (Kennedy 1998, Tognini-Bonelli 2004).

A corpus is usually computer-readable and able to be accessed with tools such as concordances which are able to find and sort out language patterns. The corpus has usually (although not always) been designed for the purpose of the analysis, and the texts have been selected to provide a sample of specific text-types, or genres, or a broad and balanced sample of spoken and/or written discourse (Stubbs 2004).

> "Corpus studies draw on collections of texts that are usually stored and analyzed electronically. They look at the occurrence and re-occurrence of particular linguistic features to see how and where they occur in the discourse. They may look at words that typically occur together (collocations) or they may look at the frequency of particular items. Corpus studies may look at language use in general, or they may look at the use of a particular linguistic feature in a particular domain, such as spoken academic discourse, or use of the item in a particular genre, such as university tutorial discussions."

Corpora may be general or they may be specialized. A general corpus, also known as a reference corpus: "Aims to represent language in its broadest sense and to serve as a widely available resource for baseline or comparative studies of general linguistic features." (Reppen and Simpson 2004). A general corpus, thus, provides sample data from which we can make generalizations about spoken and written discourse as a whole, and frequencies of occurrence and co-occurrence of particular aspects of language in the discourse. It will not, however, tell us about the language and discourse of particular genres or domain of discourse (unless the corpus can be broken down into separate genres or areas of use in some way). For this, we need a specialized corpus.

A specialized corpus, as Hunston (2002) explains is:
"A corpus of texts of a particular type, such as newspaper editorials, geography textbooks, academic articles in a particular subject, lectures, casual conversation, or essays by students etc. It aims to be representative of a given type of text. It is

CORPUS APPROACHES TO DISCOURSE ANALYSIS

What is corpus and design of Corpora

Before discussing corpus-based approaches to discourse analysis it is necessary to define what a corpus actually is. It is generally assumed that a corpus is a collection of spoken or written authentic texts that is representative of a particular area of language use, by virtue of its size and composition. It is not always the case, however, that the corpus is representative of language use in general, or even of a specific language variety, as the data set may be very specialized (such as material collected from the internet) and it may not always be based on samples of complete texts. The data may also be only of the spoken or written discourse of a single person, such as a single author's written work. It is important, then, to be aware of the specific nature and source of corpus data so that appropriate claims can be made from the analyses that are based on it (Kennedy 1998, Tognini-Bonelli 2004).

A corpus is usually computer-readable and able to be accessed with tools such as concordances which are able to find and sort out language patterns. DISCOURSE ANALYSIS AND PHONOLOGY

Pronunciation and rhythm

Under the heading of phonology in this chapter we shall take a brief look at what has traditionally been thought of as 'pronunciation', but devote most of our attention to intonation. This is partly because the most exciting developments in the analysis of discourse have been in intonation studies rather than at the segmental level (the study of phonemes and their articulation) and partly because intonation teaching, where it has taken place, has proceeded on the basis of assumptions that are open to challenge from a discourse analyst's viewpoint.

Traditional pronunciation teaching has found its strength in the ability of linguists to segment the sounds of language into isolated items called phonemes which, when used in the construction of words, produce meaningful contrasts with other words (e.g. the phonemes /p/ and /b/ in English give us contrasts such as pump and bump, pat and bat, .etc.), The position and manner of articulation of phonemes in a language like English are well described and can be presented and practiced in language classes either as isolated sounds, in words, in contrasting pairs of words or in minimal contexts.

Such features will probably long remain the stock-in-trade of pronunciation teaching and, if well done, can undoubtedly help leaners with difficulties. When words follow one another in speech, phonemes may undergo considerable changes. Good advanced learners of English use assimilations and elisions naturally, but a surprising number of quite advanced learners continue to articulate the citation-form phonemes of English words in casual, connected speech.

This will not usually cause problems of communication but is undoubtedly a contributing factor in 'foreign accent', and there may be a case for explicit intervention by the teacher to train students in the use of the most commonly occurring assimilations and elisions by practicing done at the outset, however. The compilation of the corpus needs to take place in a cyclical fashion with the original design being based on theoretical and pilot study analyses, followed by the collection of the texts, investigation of the discourse features under investigation, then, in turn, revision of the design (Biber 1994). As Reppen and Simpson (2002) explain 'no corpus can be everything to everyone'. Any corpus in the end 'is a compromise between the desirable and the feasible' (Stubbs 2004).

ENGLISH FOR ACADEMIC PURPOSES AND DISCOURSE ANALYSIS

What is EAP?

English for Academic Purposes (EAP) is usually defined as teaching English [illegible] assisting learners' study or research in that language. In this sense it is a br[illegible], covering an[illegible] areas of academic communicative practice such as pre-tertiary, undergr[illegible]e and post-graduate teaching, classroom interactions, academic publishing and curriculum issues, as well as research, student and instructional genres (e.g., Hyland, 2009a). The emergence of EAP in the 1980s, as a response to growing numbers of second language (L2) students in u[illegible]ity courses and in framework informed by English for specific purposes, originally produc[illegible] with curriculum and instruction rather than with theory and analysis.

difference? This takes place in order to differentiate in environment – superimpositior intonation (degree of prominence) and it is also the part of the formality of a language.

For the learner of English, information about which syllables may be prominent is useful; it natural part of the lexical competence of native speakers. In this regard, the traditional distinc between primary stress and secondary stress (see above) may be misleading, and it may .be n helpful simply to indicate to the learner which syllables are prominent. Otherwise, the lea may be misled into thinking that primary and secondary stress must be maintained at all costs

Intonational units

Intonation units are an important component of American English pronunciation and spe An intonation unit is a segment of speech. It can be as small as a single word, or as long sentence. Two sentences with identical grammatical structure may be comprised of diffe numbers of intonation units when spoken, based on the intent or emotional state of the spea It's important to learn to distinguish these units because they give subtle meanings and l organize a conversation. There is no single determiner as to where intonation units begin and or how many a single sentence contains, but there are clues. Generally, intonation units:

- begin with faster speech, and end with slower speech
- include a single pitch word
- end with a pitch boundary

whatever it is presupposing, and when it is accompanied by a reference item (Halliday and Hasan, 1976: 280-1). For example: There's a boy climbing the old elm. That old thing isn't very safe (Halliday and Hasan, 1976: 280). Here, the reiteration takes the form of a general word thing.

Textual aspects of lexical competence

Prior to undertaking the concept of lexical competence, it is worth defining what competence is and how it has been viewed so far. The term competence has generated substantial controversy in the field of general and applied linguistics (Chomsky, 1965; Hymes, 1972). The former regarded it as a pure grammatical competence, that is, "the speaker hearer's knowledge of his language" and the latter observed that this competence was more related to communication: a normal child acquires knowledge of sentences not only as grammatical, but also as appropriate. He or she acquires competence as to when to speak, when not, and as to what to talk about with whom, when, where, in what manner. In short, a child becomes able to accomplish a repertoire of speech acts, to take part in speech events, and to evaluate their accomplishment by others (Hymes, 1972).

A somewhat different type of lexical relation in discourse is when a writer or speaker rearranges the conventional and well-established lexical relations and asks us, as it were, to adjust our usual conceptualizations of how words relate to one another for the particular purposes of the text in question. In one way or another, our expectations as to how words are conventionally used are disturbed. A simple example is the following extract from a review of a book on American military planning. Sometimes our expectations as to how words are conventionally used are of personal a 1 of 2

Harwood (2005) also compiled his own corpus for his study of the use of the personal pronouns I and we in journal research articles. For his study, Harwood selected research articles from electronic versions of journals as well as manually scanned articles and converted them to text format. His analysis of his data was both quantitative and qualitative. The quantitative analysis examined the frequency of writers' use of I and we in the texts and the disciplines in which this occurred. The qualitative analysis examined the use of I and we from a functional perspective; that is, what the function was of these items in the texts, as well as possible explanations for their use. He then compared his findings with explanations of the use of I and we in published academic writing textbooks.

A further example of a researcher-compiled corpus is Ooi's (2001) study of the language of personal ads on the World Wide Web. Ooi had to make up his own corpus to see how people use language in this particular genre. A large-scale corpus of language use on the world wide web, in general, would not have told him this. 'Off the shelf' corpora and custom-made corpora, then, each have their strengths, and their limitations.

The choice of which to use is, in part, a matter of the research question, as well as the availability, or not, of a suitable corpus to help with answering the question. It is not necessarily the case, however, that a custom-made corpus needs to be especially large. It depends on what the purpose of collecting the corpus is. As Sinclair (2001) has argued, small manageable corpora categories, namely additive, adversative, causal, and temporal. According to Halliday (1985), conjunction is classified into elaboration, extention, and enchancement.

1) Elaboration

Elaboration means one clause that expands another by elaborating on it (or some portion of it) by restating in other words, specifying in greater detail, commenting, or exemplifying (Halliday, 1985). There are two categories of elaborative relation, namely apposition and clarification.

- Apposition

According to Kridalaksana (1993) apposition is a word or phrase which explains other preceding phrase or clause. In this type of elaboration some element is re-presented, or restated, either by exposition or example. Look at the example below:

Expository: in other word, that is (to stay), I mean (to say), to put it another way.
Exemplifying: for example, for instance, thus, to illustrate.

- Clarification

Here, the elaborated element is not simply restated but reinstated, summarized, made more precise or in some other way clarified for the purposes of discourse:

- Corrective: or, rather, at least, to be more precise
- Distractive: by the way, incidentally
- Dismissive: in any case, anyway, leaving that a side
- Particularizing: in particular, more especially
- Resumptive: as I was saying, to resume, to get back to the pint
- Summative: in short, to sum up, in conclusion, briefly
- Verifactive: actually, as a matter of fact, in fact

paying international students to compensate for cuts in government support, has resulted in a more culturally, socially and linguistically diverse student population than ever before. In addition, students now take a broader and more heterogeneous mix of academic subjects. In addition to traditional single-subject or joint-honors degrees, we now find complex modular degrees and emergent 'practice-based' courses such as nursing, management and social work. These new course configurations are more discoursally challenging for students who have to move between genres, departments and disciplines. Further, while in the past the main vehicles of academic communication were written texts, now a broad range of modalities and presentational forms confront and challenge students' communicative competence.

As a result, EAP has assumed greater prominence and importance in the academy, forcing it to evolve and to ask new questions. Instead of focusing on why learners have difficulties in accessing academic discourses, EAP now addresses the influence of culture and the demands of multiple literacies on students' academic experiences. These questions, moreover, accompany new challenges, which Centre on the increased concern with the English language skills of no native English-speaking academics. The ability to deliver workshops ipat meetings, to make presentations at international conferences and, 118 / 193 ct publish research in English are all demanded as part of such lecturers den. This group's needs are now beginning to be noticed and analyzed, and programs are emergi which cater to their particular requirements.

Current EAP aims, therefore, at capturing thicker descriptions of language use in the academy at all age and proficiency levels, incorporating and often going beyond immediate communicative example) does not suffice to understand and explain the complexity of 'politics. This is why th organizational contexts (structures, rules, regulations, and constraints) have to be accounted fo in detail.

Issues of power, hegemony and ideology have been reconceived as central to social an linguistic practices in all organizations, since all organizational forms can be translated int language and communication and because, as Deetz (1982: 135) concluded, talk and writin 'connect each perception to a larger orientation and system of meaning'. The distinction betwee structure and agency is useful, since it moves us away from a preoccupation with individua motivations and behaviors to the discursive practices through which organizational activity i performed in ritualized in ever new ways. Four prominent linguistic–discursive approaches hav proven particularly influential in organizational research to date: ethno-methodology conversation analysis (CA); sociolinguistic analysis; and (critical) discourse analysis (CDA).

Ethnomethodology, whilst technically rooted in sociology, emphasizes the conditions that hav to be satisfied for certain actions to be perceived as signifying a recognized sanction (G et al., 1981). Conversation analysis (CA) identifies the very d em taking strategies that are critical to performance and membe 126 / 193 7; Heritage, 1992) and deals with relatively short stretches of in rev representative of, the organizations' interactional principles. Sociolinguistic analysis has in the tradition of correlating sociological parameters (e.g., age, class and gender) with variation in organizational discourse (Bernstein, 1987). Interactional sociolinguistics has its origins i symbolic interactionism (Goffman, 1959) and is further developed in the broad domain o discourse studies, and responds to the criticism that the first approach underplays the effect o context on organizational discourse.

Studies in this domain are not only labor-intensive due to the required ethnography, but they ar usually organized as case studies that are not easy to generalize from. Nevertheless Holzscheiter's investigation into decision-making procedures about legal requirements of chil protection on the UN level allows important insight into the debates of NGOs and their impac on government officials (2005). Duranti's participant observation of a US senator's electio campaign trail raised awareness about the many discursive practices and persuasive device categories, namely additive, adversative, causal, and temporal. According to Halliday (1985), conjunction is classified into elaboration, extention, and enchancement.

1) Elaboration

Elaboration means one clause that expands another by elaborating on it (or some portion of it) by restating in other words, specifying in greater detail, commenting, or exemplifying (Halliday, 1985). There are two categories of elaborative relation, namely apposition and clarification.

- Apposition

According to Kridalaksana (1993) apposition is a word or phrase which explains other preceding phrase or clause. In this type of elaboration some element is re-presented, or restated, either by exposition or example. Look at the example below:

Expository: in other word, that is (to stay), I mean (to say), to put it another way.
Exemplifying: for example, for instance, thus, to illustrate.

- Clarification

Here, the elaborated element is not simply restated but reinstated, summarized, made more precise or in some other way clarified for the purposes of discourse:

- Corrective: or, rather, at least, to be more precise
- Distractive: by the way, incidentally
- Dismissive: in any case, anyway, leaving that a side
- Particularizing: in particular, more especially
- Resumptive: as I was saying, to resume, to get back to the pint
- Summative: in short, to sum up, in conclusion, briefly
- Verifactive: actually, as a matter of fact, in fact
