- Self-Esteem

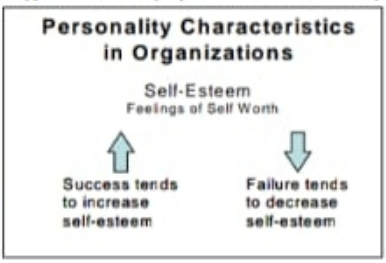
Self-esteem is the extent to which people have pride in themselves and their capabilities. Individuals with high self-esteem believe in their abilities and tend to set higher goals and perform more difficult tasks, whereas individuals with low self-esteem are full of self-doubt and apprehension. Still, people with low self-esteem may be just as capable as those with high self-esteem.



Personality characteristics create the parameters for people's behavior; they give us a framework for predicting behavior.

Type A and Type B Personalities

Type A individuals have an intense desire to achieve, are extremely competitive, have a sense of urgency, are impatient, and can be hostile. A Type A personality is "aggressively involved in a chronic, incessant struggle to achieve more and more in less and less time, and, if required to do so, against the opposing efforts of other things or other persons." They are always moving, walking, and eating rapidly, are impatient with the rate at which most events take place, are doing do two or more things at once and cannot cope with leisure time. They are obsessed with numbers, measuring their success in terms of how many or how much of everything they acquire.

Type B individuals are more relaxed and easygoing. Type A individuals may get a lot accomplished in organizations, but they also are more easily frustrated, more involved in more conflicts, and more likely to develop coronary heart disease than Type B individuals. Type Bs never suffers from a sense of time urgency with its accompanying impatience and feels no need to display or discuss either their achievements or accomplishments unless such exposure is demanded by the situation.

Play for fun and relaxation, rather than to exhibit their superiority at any cost and can relax without guilt.

1. Type A's operate under moderate to high levels of stress.
   - They subject themselves to continuous time pressure, are fast workers, quantity over quality, work long hours, and are also rarely creative.
   - Their behavior is easier to predict than that of Type Bs.
2. Are Type As or Type Bs more successful?
   - Type Bs are the ones who appear to make it to the top.
   - Great salespersons are usually Type As; senior executives are usually Type Bs.

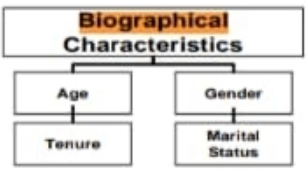
esteem and increase worker productivity by changing the reward system or the job design.

Understanding the Basics of Human Behavior

An organization's human resource policies and practices represent important forces for shaping employee behavior and attitudes. In this chapter, we specifically discussed the influence of selection practices, training and development programs, performance evaluation systems, and the existence of a union. Human resource policies and practice influence organizational effectiveness. Human resource management includes: employee selection, training performance management, and union-management relations and how they influence organizations effectiveness.

Biographical Characteristics

1. Finding and analyzing the variables that have an impact on employee productivity, absence, turnover, and satisfaction is often complicated.
2. Many of the concepts—motivation, or power, politics or organizational culture—are hard to assess.
3. Other factors are more easily definable and readily available—data that can be obtained from an employee's personnel file and would include characteristics such as:



- Age
- Gender
- Marital status
- Length of service, etc.

A. Age

1. The relationship between age and job performance is increasing in importance.
   - First, there is a widespread belief that job performance declines with increasing age.
   - Second, the workforce is aging; workers over 55 are the fastest growing sector of the workforce.
2. Employers' perceptions are mixed.
   - They see a number of positive qualities that older workers bring to their jobs, specifically experience, judgment, a strong work ethic, and commitment to quality.
   - Older workers are also perceived as lacking flexibility and as being resistant to new technology.

Management Functions

Management is the process of planning, organizing, leading, and controlling an organization's human, financial, and material resources to increase its effectiveness.
In planning, managers establish their organization's strategy, in other words, how best to allocate and use resources to achieve organizational goals. Much uncertainty and risk surround the decisions of managers during planning, and an understanding of organizational behavior can improve the quality of decision making, increase success, and lower risk.

In organizing, managers establish a structure of relationships that dictate how members of an organization work together to achieve organizational goals. Organizing involves grouping workers into departments, groups, and teams based on the tasks they perform. Organizational behavior offers guidelines on how to organize employees to make the best use of their capabilities and enhance communication and coordination.

When leading, managers encourage workers to do a good job and coordinate individual and groups so that all organizational members are working toward organizational goals. The study of different leadership methods and how to match leadership styles to the characteristics of the organization is a major concern of organizational behavior.

When controlling, managers monitor and evaluate individual, group, and organizational performance to see whether organizational goals are being achieved. Knowledge of organizational behavior allows managers to understand and accurately diagnose work situations and pinpoint the need for corrective action or strive to maintain and improve performance. Several processes at the individual or group levels (e.g., personality conflicts, poor job design) may cause poor performance.
Managers perform their four functions by assuming a number of roles in organizations. A role is a set of behaviors or tasks a person is expected to perform because of the position she or he holds in a group or organization.

lanagement Roles

lanagers can use their understanding of organizational behavior to improve their management skills. A s an ability to act in a way that allows a person to perform highly in her or his role. Managers need three ty f skills: conceptual skills to analyze and diagnose a situation to distinguish between cause and effe uman skills to understand, work with, lead, and control the behavior of individuals and groups; echnical skills, job-specific knowledge and techniques required to perform an organizational role.

ffective managers need all three types of skills—conceptual, human, and technical. For examp ntrepreneurs often are technically skilled but lack conceptual and human skills. Scientists who beco anagers have technical expertise, but low levels of human skills.
he ten roles can be grouped as being primarily concerned with interpersonal relationships, the transf f information, and decision making.

Interpersonal roles

Figurehead—duties that are ceremonial and symbolic in nature
Leadership—hire, train, motivate, and discipline employees
Liaison—contact outsiders who provide the manager with information. These may be individuals groups inside or outside the organization.

Informational Roles

- Monitor—collect information from organizations and institutions outside their own
- Disseminator—a conduit to transmit information to organizational members
- Spokesperson—represent the organization to outsiders

Decisional Roles

- Entrepreneur—managers initiate and oversee new projects that will improve their organizatio performance
- Disturbance handlers—take corrective action in response to unforeseen problems
- Resource allocators—responsible for allocating human, physical, and monetary resources
- Negotiator role—discuss issues and bargain with other units to gain advantages for their own unit

lanagement Skills

obert Katz has identified three essential management skills: technical, human, and conceptual.

Technical Skills

- The ability to apply specialized knowledge or expertise. All jobs require some specializ expertise, and many people develop their technical skills on the job.

Human Skills

- The ability to work with, understand, and motivate other people, both individually and groups, describes human skills.
  Many people are technically proficient but interpersonally incompetent

Conceptual Skills

1. The mental ability to analyze and diagnose complex situations
2. Decision making, for example, requires managers to spot problems, identify alternatives that can correct them, evaluate those alternatives, and select the best one.

kills Exhibited by an Effective Manager

1. Clarifies goals and objectives for everyone involved
2. Encourages participation, upward communication, and suggestions
3. Plans and organizes for an orderly work flow
4. Has technical and administrative expertise to answer organization-related questions
5. Facilitates work through team building, training, coaching and support

- Legal rights: defined by a system of laws
- Moral rights: based on ethical standards, Purpose: let a person freely pursue certain actions without interference from others

Attitudes

An attitude is a mental stage of readiness, learned and organized through experience, exerting a specific influence on a person's response to people, objects, and situations with which it is related.

"A persistent tendency to feel and behave in a particular way toward some object"

1. Attitudes are evaluative statements that are either favorable or unfavorable concerning objects, people, or events.
2. Attitudes are not the same as values, but the two are interrelated.
3. Three components of an attitude:
   - Cognition
   - Affect
   - Behavior

The belief that "discrimination is wrong" is a value statement and an example of the cognitive component of an attitude

4. Value statements set the stage for the more critical part of an attitude—its affective component. Affect is the emotional or feeling segment of an attitude. Example: "I don't like Jon because he discriminates again minorities."
5. The behavioral component of an attitude refers to an intention to behave in a certain way toward someone or something. Example: "I chose to avoid Jon because he discriminates."

Lesson 6

UNDERSTANDING THE VALUES

Overview

Work values, attitudes, and moods have important effects on organizational behavior. Work values (a worker's personal convictions about the outcomes one should expect from work and how one should behave at work) are an important determinant of on-the-job behavior. Job satisfaction and organizational commitment are two key work attitudes with important implications for understanding and managing behaviors such as organizational citizenship behavior, absenteeism, and turnover. Work moods are also important determinants of behavior in organizations. This chapter makes the following points:

- Work values are people's personal convictions about what one should expect to obtain from working and how one should behave at work. Work attitudes, more specific and less long lasting that values, are collections of feelings, beliefs, and thoughts that people have about how to behave in their current jobs and organizations. Work moods, more transitory than both values and attitudes, are people's feelings at the time they actually perform their jobs. Work values, attitudes, and moods all have the potential to influence each other.

- There are two types of work values. Intrinsic work values are values related to the work itself, such as doing something interesting and challenging or having a sense of accomplishment. Extrinsic work values are values related to the consequences of work, such as having family security or status in the community.

- Two important work attitudes are job satisfaction and organizational commitment. Job satisfaction is the collection of feelings and beliefs that people have about their organization as a whole. Work attitudes have three components: an affective component (how a person feels about a job), a cognitive component (what a person thinks about a job), and a behavioral component (what a person thinks about how to behave on the job).

- People experience many different moods at work. These moods can be categorized generally as positive or negative. When workers are in positive moods, they feel exited, enthusiastic, active, strong, peppy, or elated. When workers are in negative moods, they feel distressed, fearful, scornful, hostile, jittery, or nervous. Workers also experience less intense moods at work, such as feeling sleepy or calm. Work moods are determined by both personality and situation and have the potential to influence organizational behaviors ranging from absence to being helpful to customers and coworkers to creativity to leadership.

- Job satisfaction is one of the most important and well-researched attitudes in organizational behavior. Job satisfaction is determined by personality, values, the work situation, and social influence. Facet,

Emotions that are organizationally required and considered appropriate in a given job are:

Select the correct option

- Felt

appropriate i

1 of 1

encompasses both emotions and moods.

- Emotions are intense feelings that are directed at someone or something. They are reactions, not a trait.
- Moods are feelings that tend to be less intense than emotions and which lack a contextual stimulus. They are not directed at an object.

2. Emotions can turn into moods when you lose focus on the contextual object.
3. A related affect-term that is gaining increasing importance in organizational behavior is emotional labor. Originally developed in relation to service jobs. It is when an employee expresses organizationally desired emotions during interpersonal transactions.

Felt vs. Displayed Emotions

1. Emotional labor creates dilemmas for employees when their job requires them to exhibit emotions incongruous with their actual feelings. It is a frequent occurrence. For example, when there are people that you have to work with whom you find it very difficult to be friendly toward. You are forced to feign friendliness.
2. Felt emotions are an individual's actual emotions.
3. Displayed emotions are those that are organizationally required and considered appropriate in a given job. They are learned.
4. Key—felt and displayed emotions are often different. This is particularly true in organizations, where role demands and situations often require people to exhibit emotional behaviors that mask their true feelings.

Emotion Dimensions

1. Variety
   - There are many emotions. Six universal emotions have been identified: anger, fear, sadness, happiness, disgust, and surprise.
   - Emotions are identified along a continuum from positive to negative. The closer any two emotions are to each other on this continuum, the more people are likely to confuse them.

2. Intensity
   - People give different responses to identical emotion-provoking stimuli. Sometimes this can be attributed to personality.
   - People vary in their inherent ability to express intensity—from never showing feelings to displaying extreme happiness or sadness
   - Jobs make different intensity demands in terms of emotional labor. For example, air traffic controllers must remain calm even in stressful situations.

Which of the following is true about emotions?

Select the correct option

- They are less intense than moods
- They are experienced over several days or months

objective of trying to control emotions. A well-run organization was one that successfully eliminated frustration, fear, anger, love, hate, joy, grief, and similar feelings.
- The belief that emotions of any kind were disruptive. The discussion focused on strong negative emotions that interfered with an employee's ability to do his or her job effectively.

What Are Emotions?

1. Affect is a generic term that covers a broad range of feelings that people experience and encompasses both emotions and moods.
   - Emotions are intense feelings that are directed at someone or something. They are reactions, not a trait.
   - Moods are feelings that tend to be less intense than emotions and which lack a contextual stimulus. They are not directed at an object.
2. Emotions can turn into moods when you lose focus on the contextual object.
3. A related affect-term that is gaining increasing importance in organizational behavior is emotional labor. Originally developed in relation to service jobs. It is when an employee expresses organizationally desired emotions during interpersonal transactions.

Felt vs. Displayed Emotions

1. Emotional labor creates dilemmas for employees when their job requires them to exhibit emotions incongruous with their actual feelings. It is a frequent occurrence. For example, when there are people that you have to work with whom you find it very difficult to be friendly toward. You are forced to feign friendliness.
2. Felt emotions are an individual's actual emotions.
3. Displayed emotions are those that are organizationally required and considered appropriate in a given job. They are learned.
4. Key—felt and displayed emotions are often different. This is particularly true in organizations, where role demands and situations often require people to exhibit emotional behaviors that mask their true feelings.

Emotion Dimensions

1. Variety
   - There are many emotions. Six universal emotions have been identified: anger, fear, sadness, happiness, disgust, and surprise.
   - Emotions are identified along a continuum from positive to negative. The closer any two emotions are to each other on this continuum, the more people are likely to confuse them.

2. Informational Roles
   - Monitor—collect information from organizations and institutions outside their own
   - Disseminator—a conduit to transmit information to organizational members
   - Spokesperson—represent the organization to outsiders

3. Decisional Roles
   - Entrepreneur—managers initiate and oversee new projects that will improve their organization's performance
   - Disturbance handlers—take corrective action in response to unforeseen problems
   - Resource allocators—responsible for allocating human, physical, and monetary resources
   - Negotiator role—discuss issues and bargain with other units to gain advantages for their own unit

Management Skills

Robert Katz has identified three essential management skills: technical, human, and conceptual.

1. Technical Skills
   - The ability to apply specialized knowledge or expertise. All jobs require some specialized expertise, and many people develop their technical skills on the job.
2. Human Skills
   - The ability to work with, understand, and motivate other people, both individually and in groups, describes human skills.
     Many people are technically proficient but interpersonally incompetent
3. Conceptual Skills
   1. The mental ability to analyze and diagnose complex situations
   2. Decision making, for example, requires managers to spot problems, identify alternatives that can correct them, evaluate those alternatives, and select the best one.

Skills Exhibited by an Effective Manager

1. Clarifies goals and objectives for everyone involved
2. Encourages participation, upward communication, and suggestions
3. Plans and organizes for an orderly work flow
4. Has technical and administrative expertise to answer organization-related questions
5. Facilitates work through team building, training, coaching and support

Research suggests that which of the following increases with increase in tenure?

Select the correct option

Dissatisfaction

Job Productivity

Turnover

Absenteeism

tenure 9 of 11

2. Research consistently indicates that married employees have fewer absences, undergo fewer turnovers, and are more satisfied with their jobs than are their unmarried coworkers.
3. More research needs to be done on the other statuses besides single or married, such as divorce, domestic partnering, etc..

D. Tenure

1. The issue of the impact of job seniority on job performance has been subject to misconceptions and speculations.

2. Extensive reviews of the seniority-productivity relationship have been conducted:
   - There is a positive relationship between tenure and job productivity.
   - There is a negative relationship between tenure to absence.
   - Tenure is also a potent variable in explaining turnover.
   - Tenure has consistently been found to be negatively related to turnover and has been suggested as one of the single best predictors of turnover.
   - The evidence indicates that tenure and satisfaction are positively related.

Individual differences can be divided into personality and ability differences. Understanding the nature, determinants, and consequences of individual differences is essential for managing organizational behavior. An appreciation of the nature of individual differences is necessary to understand why people behave in certain ways in an organization.

1. Organizational outcomes predicted by personality include job satisfaction, work stress, and leadership effectiveness. Personality is not a useful predictor of organizational outcomes when there are strong situational constraints. Because personality tends to be stable over time, managers should not expect to change personality in the short run. Managers should accept workers' personalities as they are and develop effective ways to deal with people.
2. Feelings, thoughts, attitudes, and behaviors in an organization are determined by the interaction of personality and situation.
3. The Big Five personality traits are extraversion (positive affectivity), neuroticism (negative affectivity), agreeableness, conscientiousness, and openness to experience. Other personality traits particularly relevant to organizational behavior include locus of control, self-monitoring, self-esteem, Type A and Type B personality, and the needs for achievement, affiliation, and

- Self-Esteem

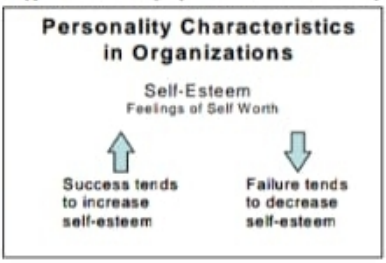
Self-esteem is the extent to which people have pride in themselves and their capabilities. Individuals with high self-esteem believe in their abilities and tend to set higher goals and perform more difficult tasks, whereas individuals with low self-esteem are full of self-doubt and apprehension. Still, people with low self-esteem may be just as capable as those with high self-esteem.



Personality characteristics create the parameters for people's behavior; they give us a framework for predicting behavior.

Type A and Type B Personalities

Type A individuals have an intense desire to achieve, are extremely competitive, have a sense of urgency, are impatient, and can be hostile. A Type A personality is "aggressively involved in a chronic, incessant struggle to achieve more and more in less and less time, and, if required to do so, against the opposing efforts of other things or other persons." They are always moving, walking, and eating rapidly, are impatient with the rate at which most events take place, are doing do two or more things at once and cannot cope with leisure time. They are obsessed with numbers, measuring their success in terms of how many or how much of everything they acquire.

Type B individuals are more relaxed and easygoing. Type A individuals may get a lot accomplished in organizations, but they also are more easily frustrated, more involved in more conflicts, and more likely to develop coronary heart disease than Type B individuals. Type Bs never suffers from a sense of time urgency with its accompanying impatience and feels no need to display or discuss either their achievements or accomplishments unless such exposure is demanded by the situation.

Play for fun and relaxation, rather than to exhibit their superiority at any cost and can relax without guilt.

1. Type A's operate under moderate to high levels of stress.
   - They subject themselves to continuous time pressure, are fast workers, quantity over quality, work long hours, and are also rarely creative.
   - Their behavior is easier to predict than that of Type Bs.
2. Are Type As or Type Bs more successful?
   - Type Bs are the ones who appear to make it to the top.
   - Great salespersons are usually Type As; senior executives are usually Type Bs.

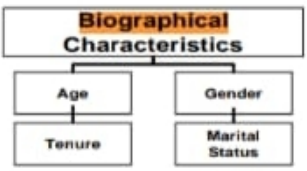
Understanding the Basics of Human Behavior

An organization's human resource policies and practices represent important forces for shaping employee behavior and attitudes. In this chapter, we specifically discussed the influence of selection practices, training and development programs, performance evaluation systems, and the existence of a union. Human resource policies and practice influence organizational effectiveness. Human resource management includes: employee selection, training performance management, and union-management relations and how they influence organizations effectiveness.

Biographical Characteristics

1. Finding and analyzing the variables that have an impact on employee productivity, absence, turnover, and satisfaction is often complicated.
2. Many of the concepts—motivation, or power, politics or organizational culture—are hard to assess.
3. Other factors are more easily definable and readily available—data that can be obtained from an employee's personnel file and would include characteristics such as:



- Age
- Gender
- Marital status
- Length of service, etc.

A. Age

1. The relationship between age and job performance is increasing in importance.
   - First, there is a widespread belief that job performance declines with increasing age.
   - Second, the workforce is aging; workers over 55 are the fastest growing sector of the workforce.
2. Employers' perceptions are mixed.
   - They see a number of positive qualities that older workers bring to their jobs, specifically experience, judgment, a strong work ethic, and commitment to quality.
   - Older workers are also perceived as lacking flexibility and as being resistant to new technology.

Management Functions

Management is the process of planning, organizing, leading, and controlling an organization's human, financial, and material resources to increase its effectiveness.
In planning, managers establish their organization's strategy, in other words, how best to allocate and use resources to achieve organizational goals. Much uncertainty and risk surround the decisions of managers during planning, and an understanding of organizational behavior can improve the quality of decision making, increase success, and lower risk.

In organizing, managers establish a structure of relationships that dictate how members of an organization work together to achieve organizational goals. Organizing involves grouping workers into departments, groups, and teams based on the tasks they perform. Organizational behavior offers guidelines on how to organize employees to make the best use of their capabilities and enhance communication and coordination.

When leading, managers encourage workers to do a good job and coordinate individual and groups so that all organizational members are working toward organizational goals. The study of different leadership methods and how to match leadership styles to the characteristics of the organization is a major concern of organizational behavior.

When controlling, managers monitor and evaluate individual, group, and organizational performance to see whether organizational goals are being achieved. Knowledge of organizational behavior allows managers to understand and accurately diagnose work situations and pinpoint the need for corrective action or strive to maintain and improve performance. Several processes at the individual or group levels (e.g., personality conflicts, poor job design) may cause poor performance.
Managers perform their four functions by assuming a number of roles in organizations. A role is a set of behaviors or tasks a person is expected to perform because of the position she or he holds in a group or organization.

Attitudes

An attitude is a mental stage of readiness, learned and organized through experience, exerting a specific influence on a person's response to people, objects, and situations with which it is related.

"A persistent tendency to feel and behave in a particular way toward some object"

1. Attitudes are evaluative statements that are either favorable or unfavorable concerning objects, people, or events.
2. Attitudes are not the same as values, but the two are interrelated.
3. Three components of an attitude:
   - Cognition
   - Affect
   - Behavior

The belief that "discrimination is wrong" is a value statement and an example of the cognitive component of an attitude

4. Value statements set the stage for the more critical part of an attitude—its affective component. Affect is the emotional or feeling segment of an attitude. Example: "I don't like Jon because he discriminates again minorities."
5. The behavioral component of an attitude refers to an intention to behave in a certain way toward someone or something. Example: "I chose to avoid Jon because he discriminates."

lanagement Roles

lanagers can use their understanding of organizational behavior to improve their management skills. A s an ability to act in a way that allows a person to perform highly in her or his role. Managers need three ty f skills: conceptual skills to analyze and diagnose a situation to distinguish between cause and effe uman skills to understand, work with, lead, and control the behavior of individuals and groups; echnical skills, job-specific knowledge and techniques required to perform an organizational role.

ffective managers need all three types of skills—conceptual, human, and technical. For examp ntrepreneurs often are technically skilled but lack conceptual and human skills. Scientists who beco anagers have technical expertise, but low levels of human skills.
he ten roles can be grouped as being primarily concerned with interpersonal relationships, the transf f information, and decision making.

Interpersonal roles

Figurehead—duties that are ceremonial and symbolic in nature
Leadership—hire, train, motivate, and discipline employees
Liaison—contact outsiders who provide the manager with information. These may be individuals groups inside or outside the organization.

Informational Roles

- Monitor—collect information from organizations and institutions outside their own
- Disseminator—a conduit to transmit information to organizational members
- Spokesperson—represent the organization to outsiders

Decisional Roles

- Entrepreneur—managers initiate and oversee new projects that will improve their organizatio performance
- Disturbance handlers—take corrective action in response to unforeseen problems
- Resource allocators—responsible for allocating human, physical, and monetary resources
- Negotiator role—discuss issues and bargain with other units to gain advantages for their own unit

lanagement Skills

obert Katz has identified three essential management skills: technical, human, and conceptual.

Technical Skills

- The ability to apply specialized knowledge or expertise. All jobs require some specializ expertise, and many people develop their technical skills on the job.

Human Skills

- The ability to work with, understand, and motivate other people, both individually and groups, describes human skills.
  Many people are technically proficient but interpersonally incompetent

Conceptual Skills

1. The mental ability to analyze and diagnose complex situations
2. Decision making, for example, requires managers to spot problems, identify alternatives that can correct them, evaluate those alternatives, and select the best one.

kills Exhibited by an Effective Manager

1. Clarifies goals and objectives for everyone involved
2. Encourages participation, upward communication, and suggestions
3. Plans and organizes for an orderly work flow
4. Has technical and administrative expertise to answer organization-related questions
5. Facilitates work through team building, training, coaching and support

Lesson 6

UNDERSTANDING THE VALUES

Overview

Work values, attitudes, and moods have important effects on organizational behavior. Work values (a worker's personal convictions about the outcomes one should expect from work and how one should behave at work) are an important determinant of on-the-job behavior. Job satisfaction and organizational commitment are two key work attitudes with important implications for understanding and managing behaviors such as organizational citizenship behavior, absenteeism, and turnover. Work moods are also important determinants of behavior in organizations. This chapter makes the following points:

- Work values are people's personal convictions about what one should expect to obtain from working and how one should behave at work. Work attitudes, more specific and less long lasting that values, are collections of feelings, beliefs, and thoughts that people have about how to behave in their current jobs and organizations. Work moods, more transitory than both values and attitudes, are people's feelings at the time they actually perform their jobs. Work values, attitudes, and moods all have the potential to influence each other.

- There are two types of work values. Intrinsic work values are values related to the work itself, such as doing something interesting and challenging or having a sense of accomplishment. Extrinsic work values are values related to the consequences of work, such as having family security or status in the community.

- Two important work attitudes are job satisfaction and organizational commitment. Job satisfaction is the collection of feelings and beliefs that people have about their organization as a whole. Work attitudes have three components: an affective component (how a person feels about a job), a cognitive component (what a person thinks about a job), and a behavioral component (what a person thinks about how to behave on the job).

- People experience many different moods at work. These moods can be categorized generally as positive or negative. When workers are in positive moods, they feel exited, enthusiastic, active, strong, peppy, or elated. When workers are in negative moods, they feel distressed, fearful, scornful, hostile, jittery, or nervous. Workers also experience less intense moods at work, such as feeling sleepy or calm. Work moods are determined by both personality and situation and have the potential to influence organizational behaviors ranging from absence to being helpful to customers and coworkers to creativity to leadership.

- Job satisfaction is one of the most important and well-researched attitudes in organizational behavior. Job satisfaction is determined by personality, values, the work situation, and social influence. Facet,

Please read the following instructions carefully!

1. Quiz will be based upon Multiple Choice Questions (MCQs).
2. You have to attempt the quiz online. You can start attempting the quiz any time within given date(s) of a particular subject by clicking the link for Quiz in VULMS.
3. Each question has a fixed time of 90 seconds. So you have to save your answer before 90 seconds. But due to unstable internet speeds, it is recommended that you should save your answer within 80 seconds. While attempting a question, keep an eye on the remaining time.
4. Attempting quiz is unidirectional. Once you move forward to the next question, you can not go back to the previous one. Therefore before moving to the next question, make sure that you have selected the best option.
5. DO NOT press Back Button / Backspace Button while attempting a question, otherwise you will lose that question.
6. DO NOT refresh the page unnecessarily, specially when following messages appear
   - Saving...
   - Question Timeout. Now loading next question...
7. Javascript MUST be enabled in your browser; otherwise you will not be able to attempt the quiz.
8. If for any reason, you lose access to internet (like power failure or disconnection of internet), you will be able to attempt the quiz again from the question next to the last shown question. But remember that you have to complete the quiz before expiry of the deadline.
9. If any student failed to attempt the quiz in given time then no re-take or offline quiz will be held.

Important Announcement

1. It has come to the University's knowledge that some students are using unfair means while attempting their Mid-Term quiz.
2. The University is monitoring & analyzing the quiz attempts and if a student is found involved in using unfair means, i.e., helping tools/software, Web Extension, Add-ons etc., an Unfair Means Case (UMC) will be made against such student(s) including cancellation of their Mid-Term quiz.

Which of the following is true about emotions?

Select the correct option

objective of trying to control emotions. A well-run organization was one that successfully eliminated frustration, fear, anger, love, hate, joy, grief, and similar feelings.
- The belief that emotions of any kind were disruptive. The discussion focused on strong negative emotions that interfered with an employee's ability to do his or her job effectively.

What Are Emotions?

1. Affect is a generic term that covers a broad range of feelings that people experience and encompasses both emotions and moods.
   - Emotions are intense feelings that are directed at someone or something. They are reactions, not a trait.
   - Moods are feelings that tend to be less intense than emotions and which lack a contextual stimulus. They are not directed at an object.
2. Emotions can turn into moods when you lose focus on the contextual object.
3. A related affect-term that is gaining increasing importance in organizational behavior is emotional labor. Originally developed in relation to service jobs. It is when an employee expresses organizationally desired emotions during interpersonal transactions.

Felt vs. Displayed Emotions

1. Emotional labor creates dilemmas for employees when their job requires them to exhibit emotions incongruous with their actual feelings. It is a frequent occurrence. For example, when there are people that you have to work with whom you find it very difficult to be friendly toward. You are forced to feign friendliness.
2. Felt emotions are an individual's actual emotions.
3. Displayed emotions are those that are organizationally required and considered appropriate in a given job. They are learned.
4. Key—felt and displayed emotions are often different. This is particularly true in organizations, where role demands and situations often require people to exhibit emotional behaviors that mask their true feelings.

Emotion Dimensions

1. Variety
   - There are many emotions. Six universal emotions have been identified: anger, fear, sadness, happiness, disgust, and surprise.
   - Emotions are identified along a continuum from positive to negative. The closer any two emotions are to each other on this continuum, the more people are likely to confuse them.

2. Informational Roles
   - Monitor—collect information from organizations and institutions outside their own
   - Disseminator—a conduit to transmit information to organizational members
   - Spokesperson—represent the organization to outsiders

3. Decisional Roles
   - Entrepreneur—managers initiate and oversee new projects that will improve their organization's performance
   - Disturbance handlers—take corrective action in response to unforeseen problems
   - Resource allocators—responsible for allocating human, physical, and monetary resources
   - Negotiator role—discuss issues and bargain with other units to gain advantages for their own unit

Management Skills

Robert Katz has identified three essential management skills: technical, human, and conceptual.

1. Technical Skills
   - The ability to apply specialized knowledge or expertise. All jobs require some specialized expertise, and many people develop their technical skills on the job.
2. Human Skills
   - The ability to work with, understand, and motivate other people, both individually and in groups, describes human skills.
     Many people are technically proficient but interpersonally incompetent
3. Conceptual Skills
   1. The mental ability to analyze and diagnose complex situations
   2. Decision making, for example, requires managers to spot problems, identify alternatives that can correct them, evaluate those alternatives, and select the best one.

Skills Exhibited by an Effective Manager

1. Clarifies goals and objectives for everyone involved
2. Encourages participation, upward communication, and suggestions
3. Plans and organizes for an orderly work flow
4. Has technical and administrative expertise to answer organization-related questions
5. Facilitates work through team building, training, coaching and support

Research suggests that which of the following increases with increase in tenure?

Select the correct option

Dissatisfaction

Job Productivity

Turnover

Absenteeism

tenure 9 of 11

2. Research consistently indicates that married employees have fewer absences, undergo fewer turnovers, and are more satisfied with their jobs than are their unmarried coworkers.
3. More research needs to be done on the other statuses besides single or married, such as divorce, domestic partnering, etc..

D. Tenure

1. The issue of the impact of job seniority on job performance has been subject to misconceptions and speculations.

2. Extensive reviews of the seniority-productivity relationship have been conducted:
   - There is a positive relationship between tenure and job productivity.
   - There is a negative relationship between tenure to absence.
   - Tenure is also a potent variable in explaining turnover.
   - Tenure has consistently been found to be negatively related to turnover and has been suggested as one of the single best predictors of turnover.
   - The evidence indicates that tenure and satisfaction are positively related.

Individual differences can be divided into personality and ability differences. Understanding the nature, determinants, and consequences of individual differences is essential for managing organizational behavior. An appreciation of the nature of individual differences is necessary to understand why people behave in certain ways in an organization.

1. Organizational outcomes predicted by personality include job satisfaction, work stress, and leadership effectiveness. Personality is not a useful predictor of organizational outcomes when there are strong situational constraints. Because personality tends to be stable over time, managers should not expect to change personality in the short run. Managers should accept workers' personalities as they are and develop effective ways to deal with people.
2. Feelings, thoughts, attitudes, and behaviors in an organization are determined by the interaction of personality and situation.
3. The Big Five personality traits are extraversion (positive affectivity), neuroticism (negative affectivity), agreeableness, conscientiousness, and openness to experience. Other personality traits particularly relevant to organizational behavior include locus of control, self-monitoring, self-esteem, Type A and Type B personality, and the needs for achievement, affiliation, and
