Q. How 'situation' affects the leadership process?

The 'situation' has certain affects on the leadership process with regard to participating, delegating, selling or telling. The leader should adapt accordingly to the task on hand. He should try to have the in-group inclusive as suggested by the Leader-Member Exchange theory. The leader should exhibit and have the qualities to transform him self according to the situation.

Q. Describe any three major reasons of designing human resource management communication programs?

- ✚ Communication between the employee and the management, so that the efficiency is not affected and burnouts are avoided at all costs.
- ✚ To instill the confidence in the employee that he is part of the decision making process and ensuring group cohesiveness (two way communication).
- ✚ Assists the management in exercising control over the employees giving way to a sharing of information and knowledge (top-down communication)

Q. What are the different challenges which management can face when motivating employees?

The challenges faced are multi varied and multi faceted. These may include,

- ✚ Work force diversity – this forces the manager to adopt different motivational methods and techniques because of a heterogeneous group.
- ✚ Retaining and motivating qualified entry-level employees which usually results in fewer entry level employees and the manager has to invest on the others to train.

MGT501_Finals_Solved

- ✚ Organizational restructuring affects the employees behavior and he avoids taking any risks resulting in the development and discovery of new products.
- ✚ An oversupply of managers for very few seats available negatively affects the people who want to climb the ladder.

Q. What are five factors associated with the success of international assignments? Is there any one factor which is more important than the others? Explain.

- ✚ Selection
- ✚ Training
- ✚ Compensation

Selection is the most important factor of all since it encompasses the basic ingredients which would eventually lead towards the progress of any organization. The selection would encompass whether the prospective employee has had any experience of any international assignment; is he comfortable in the environment of a diverse work force; does he/she has the capacity to adjust to the new culture. To sum it up, the cultural sensitivity and its absorption would be the bottom line for the selection.

Q. What factors explain the decline in unionization for the last half century? Do you think the unions in organizations should completely die or they should continue?

They may be elicited as following,

- ✚ Effective communication between the employee and the management.
- ✚ Effective supervision in terms of first line supervision.
- ✚ Better work environment with regard to safety and health hazards being in place.
- ✚ Implementation of better compensation packages and benefits.

In my opinion, unions in organizations should continue, since there should be some platform of the employees from where employees are able to raise their voices in union in case the management neglects the employee rights and their welfare

Q. Explain the following terms:

- ✚ PERSONALITY: Personality is a combination of psychological traits that describes a person.

MGT501_Finals_Solved

- ✚ PERCEPTION: Perception is the mental process to pay attention selectively to some stimuli in the environment.
- ✚ ATTITUDE: Attitude comprises of feelings, beliefs and behaviors.

- ✚ ETHICS: Ethics are the rules and principles that tell what is right and wrong.

Q. Can "pay for performance" be applicable to the employees of NGOs?

"Pay for performance" can be applicable to employees of NGOs, though it requires careful implementation due to the unique nature of non-profit work. Unlike for-profit entities, NGOs often focus on social impact and long-term goals rather than financial metrics, making performance measurement more complex. Implementing a pay-for-performance system in NGOs can motivate employees by linking their compensation to the achievement of specific, mission-aligned goals. However, it must be designed to reflect the organization's values, such as community impact, fundraising success, and program effectiveness, ensuring it encourages behaviors that align with the NGO's mission rather than just financial results.

Q. Conflict at work place is not always in favor of management. What kind of output management has to bear when conflicts appear?

When conflicts arise in the workplace, management may face various negative outcomes, including decreased productivity, reduced employee morale, and increased turnover. Conflicts can disrupt team cohesion and lead to communication breakdowns, which hinder collaboration and the achievement of organizational goals. Additionally, unresolved conflicts can result in a toxic work environment, causing stress and dissatisfaction among employees. This, in turn, can lead to absenteeism, a decline in the quality of work, and even potential legal issues if conflicts escalate to harassment or discrimination claims. Overall, management must bear the costs associated with conflict resolution, decreased efficiency, and potential damage to the organization's reputation.

Q. How an organization conduct the collective bargaining process?

An organization conducts the collective bargaining process through a structured negotiation between management and employee representatives, typically from a union. The process begins with both parties preparing by gathering relevant information, such as financial data, workforce needs, and employee grievances. This is followed by the establishment of a bargaining agenda, where key issues such as wages, working conditions, benefits, and job security are outlined. Negotiations then take place in formal meetings where proposals and counterproposals are exchanged. Effective collective bargaining requires open communication, compromise, and a willingness to find mutually beneficial solutions. If an agreement is reached, it is formalized in a collective bargaining agreement (CBA) that outlines the terms and conditions of employment. If negotiations stall, mediation or arbitration might be employed to resolve disputes.

Q. Unemployment compensation is rare in Pakistan. What do you think that who is responsible; Government or Corporate Sector? Explain possible reasons.

The rarity of unemployment compensation in Pakistan is primarily the responsibility of the government, though the corporate sector also plays a role. The government is responsible for establishing and enforcing social safety nets, including unemployment benefits. However, in Pakistan, limited resources, insufficient funding, and a lack of comprehensive social security legislation have hindered the development of robust unemployment compensation systems. Additionally, the corporate sector's informal nature, with many businesses operating outside regulatory frameworks, exacerbates the issue as these companies often do not contribute to or comply with existing social security schemes. Consequently, workers lack access to unemployment benefits, leaving them vulnerable in periods of joblessness. The solution requires coordinated efforts to strengthen government policies, improve enforcement, and incentivize corporate compliance with social welfare programs.
