Explain the possible risks associated with Budgeting.

Risks

1. Interest Rates :-

The Council has no current long term debts but significant investments. Changes in interest rates can have a significant effect on interest income. However much of the interest income is credited to the HRA and there is usually an offsetting change to housing subsidy

2. Pension Fund :-

The Council contributes to the Essex County Local Government pension fund.

3. Changes in specific grant income :-

The Council receives large sums each year in specific grants, eg £25m for housing and council tax benefit. The risk is that changes in Government rules or an inadvertent failure to comply with grant conditions might result in a significant loss of income

4. Fraud :-

Major fraud might cause significant financial loss to the Council as well as weakening public confidence

5. Insolvency of Counterparties :-

The Council might suffer losses in the event of the insolvency of major partners or commercial suppliers. This is a particular risk in relation to investment transactions.

6. Changes to Housing Subsidy :-

The Housing Revenue Account (HRA) makes a net payment of 'subsidy' to the Government. However changes in subsidy rules could increase this payment and worsen the financial position of the HRA (equally changes could benefit the HRA)

Question No: 36 (Marks: 5)

Identify the major elements of mega environment which effect an organization.

Elements of the Mega Environment

There are many external elements that can negatively affect a business, such as increased competition, rapidly changing technology and economic fluctuations. Within these elements, you will find, among other things, foreign competition, capital markets movements, legal contrasts and non-responsive political solutions. A change in an external uncontrollable element will be felt by all businesses in an industry, but the impact these changes have on a specific business depends on the strength and stability of the management team.

A major problem with predicting the movement of uncontrollable elements is their interaction with each other. External elements are closely interrelated, and consequently, anything affecting one element can have a secondary effect on another element. For example, a cultural/social change in our society can result in a legal/political change. These adjustments can affect our economic environment, which can lead to changes in technological developments. The development of technology, in turn, can affect the level of competition. These interactions prove circular when you realize the status of competition then affects our economy, culture and society. (See Exhibit 3.) Many managers do not realize that they can plan for changes in the external environment to safeguard their businesses. Foresight is essential in order to adapt to changes in the external environment. For example, consider a company that thrives on the sale of a single line of computer software. If this company does not begin developing new products or improve its existing product, it will quickly be shut out by the competition. Producing single or narrow-lined products with no concentration on new product development severely limits a business's ability to compete. This is true especially when external changes, such as technological discoveries, inspire competitors to improve existing products or to create newer, more effective ones.

Managers can safeguard their businesses by planning for external changes. Consider the tobacco companies as an example. They have known for many years about the external changes affecting their industry. They have been affected by cultural/social and legal/political changes for the last several decades. They developed new products, such as smokeless tobaccos, to offset their declining product sales

Why organizational management favors group-decision making over decisions by individuals?

Human performance in decision making terms has been the subject of active research from several perspectives. From a psychological perspective, it is necessary to examine individual decisions in the context of a set of needs, preferences an individual has and values they seek. From a cognitive perspective, the decision making process must be regarded as a continuous process integrated in the interaction with the environment. From a normative perspective, the analysis of individual decisions is concerned with the logic of decision making and rationality and the invariant choice it leads to.[2]

Yet, at another level, it might be regarded as a problem solving activity which is terminated when a satisfactory solution is found. Therefore, decision making is a reasoning or emotional process which can be rational or irrational, can be based on explicit assumptions or tacit assumptions.

Logical decision making is an important part of all science-based professions, where specialists apply their knowledge in a given area to making informed decisions. For example, medical decision making often involves making a diagnosis and selecting an appropriate treatment. Some research using naturalistic methods shows, however, that in situations with higher time pressure, higher stakes, or increased ambiguities, experts use intuitive decision making rather than structured approaches, following a recognition primed decision approach to fit a set of indicators into the expert's experience and immediately arrive at a satisfactory course of action without weighing alternatives. Recent robust decision efforts have formally integrated uncertainty into the decision making process.
