

Learning styles are related to _____, which is a collection of techniques, models, and theories based on how mind works and how people behave and communicate.

Select the correct option

☐	LNP
☒	NLP
☐	PLN
☐	LPN

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Q.

learning styles

6 of 33

Topic- 034: Language Styles

Learning success depends on a number of factors. There are a number of different ways to look at learning styles. One is based on the findings of research into brain function, that the right and left side of the brain play different roles in how we process information. Depending on which side of the brain is dominant, there are the 'left-brain' learners who tend to analyze, and to be logical and objective. They may prefer traditional lectures, reading, and clearly structured classroom activities and 'Right-brain' learners tend to be more impulsive and informal, and may appreciate the use of graphics and role-playing activities to enhance their learning.

Learning styles are related to NLP (Neuro-Linguistic Programming), which is a collection of techniques, models, and theories based on how the mind works and how people behave and communicate. NLP has been useful to some business English teachers because of the insight it gives into various communication skills such as building rapport, non-verbal communication, active listening, and so on, it can also help our learners understand how they perceive the world, and what affects that perception.

Howard Gardner's multiple intelligence theory provides another way to compare learning needs, suggesting eight different types of intelligence: Bodily-Kinaesthetic, Intrapersonal, Interpersonal, Verbal-Linguistic, Logical-Mathematical, Musical, Visual-Spatial, and Naturalist.

Teachers can look at their learners in terms of these intelligences, and draw conclusions as to what learning styles and strategies might be most suitable. Of course, trainers will develop their understanding as the course progresses. So, for example, a learner who appears to function well in intrapersonal intelligence might benefit from activities which allow time for quiet self-study, and a person who is strong in logical-mathematical intelligence might benefit from activities which analyze language.

Corporate clients are favorably _____ if the trainer they are dealing with knows something about the company size.

Select the correct option

☐	appressed
☐	expressed
☒	impressed
☐	depressed

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

corporate

4 of 25

Topic- 035: Business Needs

Understanding business needs is of critical importance for a BE teacher. A provider of language training must consider the needs of the sponsor, who may be a company, or a head of department, or the HR (Human Resources) manager. All of these have certain perspectives on what the learners will need to cover on a course. It is important to make it clear to sponsors and heads that their needs are recognized and will be addressed, while remaining realistic about what is promised. Businesses are interested in getting something worthwhile for their money. A company pays for training or an institution hires a teacher because it feels that the investment will lead to some sort of profit, be it more motivated workers, more effective negotiators, better presenters, managers, or high achieving students.

One way for the teacher is to understand business needs and learn about the company. This means doing some research. Ideally, this is done before starting to meet people. Corporate clients are favorably impressed if the trainer or language school they are dealing with knows something about the company's product, the market, and its size. With the internet, this is relatively easy to do but there are also limitations. Reading an annual report will give one perspective, but such documents are designed to tempt investors. Websites which are open to the public may not have all the details a teacher needs. At this stage, some basic information is needed, so that when we enter the company and start talking to people, we can demonstrate our professionalism and ask the right questions.

Business English teachers needed to understand the various business functions of those involved. The perspective of the engineering department will be very different from that of people in the financial department. Product information is also important. The engineers who build mobile phones will have a very different perspective from the one we may have as a user. They will be interested in materials, technical specifications, and so on. The financial people will be more interested in the last auditors' report, and next week's balance sheet.

Company's hierarchy is important to be understood and the level of learners in the company

8. In business communication while designing a course, objectives can be made for _____ skills.

Select the correct option

☐

all the given options

☐

writing

☐

presentation

☐

negotiation

Click to Save Answer & Move

objectives can

3 of 4

Setting objectives for an individual course is an ideal situation for a tailor-made course. Individual's needs provide the trainee the opportunity to have a customized program and allow the teacher to go at his/her own pace, time, content and approach.

For 'Business Communication in English' for open group course or a public group, participants come from a wide audience and from a wide range of areas. In such a general BE course or executive English course participants will come from perhaps, geographical, corporate and professional areas. The trainer needs to be careful to fulfill the diverse objectives of such a group and have them agree on the objectives.

Close group course should be more or less a homogenous group of learners. Learners may be from same company, same professional function, same department, easiest in terms of objectives. Objectives can be made for meeting skills/ negotiation skills, presentation skills, writing skills, telephoning etc.

Objectives are not written in stone to be slavishly followed. It is an ongoing, interactive process. A learning centered approach will allow the designer to add and amend the course at any stage. Reflective practice is particularly important. The teacher and trainer keeps on thinking about ways of improving practice and incorporating these into future objectives. To be negotiated in beginning and during the course, regular feedback sessions will bring out trainees' strengths and weaknesses.

The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency can be referred as the learner's _____

Select the correct option

☒	lacks
☐	necessities
☐	wants
☐	gaps

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Q

and existing

1 of 1

or not the learners need instruction in this will depend on how they can do it already. The target proficiency in other words needs to be matched against the existing proficiency of the learners. The gap between the two can be referred to as the learner's lacks.

c. Wants: So far we have looked at target needs objectively with no active role by the learners. But learners too have a view of what their needs are - their wants. We have stressed that it is the awareness of the need that characterizes the ESP situation. Awareness is a matter of individual perception. Learners may have a clear idea about the 'necessities' of the target situation; they will certainly have a view as to what they want. It is quite possible that the learners' views will conflict with the perception of other interested parties: course designers, sponsors, and teachers.

So in any course the need is what Hutchinson says: to give what the learner lacks. One should also know what the learner knows already so that what he/she lacks can be determined. The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency is called the learners' "lack". A main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out how good the learners' language use is, what is their current communicative competence? Using of placement tests which have validity, face validity, authenticity, reliable, is important. Wants are learners own view of what they "want" from the course, which might be in conflict with the course and the instructor's perceptions of learners' necessities and lacks.

Topic- 029: Analyzing Learning Needs

Learning needs can be analyzed by using different tools to collect a series of snapshots which allow them to compare a target situation with the current situation, thus leading to a focused course. After gathering information through forms, questionnaires, interviews, observation tests etc. the teacher has to analyze learners' needs. The data acquired does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do, so it becomes more difficult as the course progresses. A needs analysis provides a series of snapshots which contribute to our understanding. It differentiates a General English course from ESP course and provides

Question # 5 of 10 (Start time: 01:55:26 PM, 23 May 2023)

While designing a course of business communication, it is important to be aware of _____ current performance ability in the target area before designing course objectives.

Select the correct option

☐

parents'

☐

examiners'

☒

learners'

☐

teachers'

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next

current per

1 of 1

Practical constraints in making these objectives need to see whether they are achievable, as well as to keep in mind that people might have different objectives and how lack of attendance will affect the objectives.

Topic- 041: Performance (Behavioral) Objectives

There are different ways to express objectives, depending on the context. Most business English courses use performance (behavioral) objectives in terms of what the learner is expected to do, under what conditions, and to what level or standard. Such objectives use words like:

Will learn...Will be able to...

Making objectives has to consider such questions as what learners would be able to do, how they would be able to perform, and at what level. It is important to know the current performance of learners. Assessing entry levels are important for two reasons. First it is the mostly, widely asked question by learners - How is my English? Secondly assessing a trainee's entry level is a prerequisite for course design. In other words, course objectives minus current ability should indicate/be equal to the course outline. It helps in designing the course, as course objectives minus current ability means course outline.

However, it is difficult to find a satisfactory assessment method to assess competence, as assessment is an area fraught with difficulties. There are no agreed criteria to scientifically assess what we teach. Our aim is to assess competence based around accuracy of language knowledge, fluency and effectiveness of communication). Accuracy can be tested objectively, whereas in fluency and effectiveness assessment, we rely on our subjective judgment. All evaluation must keep a balance between objectivity and subjectivity. Assessment at the entry level can be done through formal tests. Correct use of language, through listening and reading comprehension, writing skills, controlled or semi-controlled speaking can be used.

Question # 6 of 10 (Start time: 01:56:23 PM, 23 May 2023)

Needs analysis is the _____ stage in Business Communication course development.

Select the correct option

☒	first
☐	second
☐	third
☐	fourth

Click to Save Answer & Move to needs ana

8 of 70

Lesson 05

NEEDS ANALYSIS-I

Topic- 025: What are Needs? What are Target Needs?

The difference between Business English (BE) and General English (GE) courses is basically that Business English aims to fulfill the needs of business and management students. What are these needs? The basic aim of a needs analysis is to collect and examine critically, information about the current situation (where the students are at present) and the target situation (where they would like to be at the end of the teaching).

Needs analysis, carried out to establish the "what" and the "how" of a course, is the first stage in Business Communication course development, followed by curriculum design, materials selection, methodology, assessment, and evaluation. However, these stages should not be seen as separate, but as proceeding in a linear fashion. They come at the pre-course stage. The teacher needs to know the needs of the learners so that the objectives of the course may be decided. Business English learners have more precisely defined needs than general English learners and these needs should be incorporated in the course objectives. It is useful to see the needs analysis stage as consisting of three separate but linked elements:

- The range of communication and language required in the learner's present of future profession.
- The current ability of the learner in terms of language and communication.
- The actual objective of the training program

In order to find this we need to address the following questions:

- What type of information do we need to get?
- How can we get this information?

Question # 7 of 10 (start time: 01:57:22 PM, 23 May 2023)

Learning _____ can be analyzed by using different tools to collect a series of snapshots

Select the correct option

☐

needs

☐

lacks

☐

styles

☐

gaps

Click to Save Answer

series of sna

2 of 4

they want. It is quite possible that the learners' views will conflict with the perception of other interested parties: course designers, sponsors, and teachers.

So in any course the need is what Hutchinson says: to give what the learner lacks. One should also know what the learner knows already so that what he/she lacks can be determined. The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency is called the learners' "lack". A main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out how good the learners' language use is, what is their current communicative competence? Using of placement tests which have validity, face validity, authenticity, reliable, is important. Wants are learners own view of what they "want" from the course, which might be in conflict with the course and the instructor's perceptions of learners' necessities and lacks.

Topic- 029: Analyzing Learning Needs

Learning needs can be analyzed by using different tools to collect a series of snapshots which allow them to compare a target situation with the current situation, thus leading to a focused course. After gathering information through forms, questionnaires, interviews, observation tests etc. the teacher has to analyze learners' needs. The data acquired does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do, so it becomes more difficult as the course progresses. A needs analysis provides a series of snapshots which contribute to our understanding. It differentiates a General English course from ESP course and provides

While negotiating priorities in business communication, if the course is covering presentations, then learners can choose their own _____

Select the correct option

☒	topics
☐	criteria
☐	examiners
☐	subjects

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

negotiating priorities 2 of 3

answer to which is, in effect, the syllabus and which will have to be some amalgam of the differing priorities that have surfaced. The learners come to know that what happens is actually a compromise. Getting them to sign at the bottom of the page is a useful way to remind them that they are part of the success of the course. These sheets can be used to review the course later:

- What I want from this course
- What I don't want from this course
- What the group wants from this course
- Name:.....
- Date:.....
- Signature:.....

Negotiating priorities - this time, the aim is to guide learners towards a possible syllabus by suggesting possible options. A variation on this is to give learners different options during the course: do they want to do this or that next week? Teachers might allow learners to develop their own tasks and activities. For example, if the course is covering presentation skills, the learners could make decisions about the topics of their own presentations, or the length, or the criteria for success. Such an approach emphasizes the need for compromise, which are important elements in group work.

Topic- 050: Using Learner's Input

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the process, their input is crucial. It gives insight to the teacher about the pace of the course and course content. The teacher can give the class a questionnaire to fill questions about their own preferences, and then pass the sheets around so that everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that different people have different needs. This information is then used as the basis for a third question, the answer to which is

Question # 9 of 10 (start time: 01:59:14 PM, 23 May 2023)

In business English communication teaching, an intensive course is designed for:

select the correct option

☐	short periods
☒	a, b & c
☐	Specific objectives
☐	Improvement

Click to See

intensive training

2 of 4

conference room in company offices. Business English learners expect a high level of professionalism in the way a course is run, and such professionalism can and should be designed into the course.

One decision which needs to be made is whether the teaching is to be intensive or extensive. In practice, in the world of business English teaching, the terms seem to be used differently by different organizations. Intensive training can be anything from a few hours a day, for a few weeks, to ten days in a hotel, working all day. Intensive training is often used where time is short and where there are specific performance objectives to achieve. It tends to be much more focused ~~than extensive training~~, and is often more efficient in its use of time (no need to warm learners up every 90 minutes, for example). For many learners, intensive training leads to noticeable improvement. Often intensive training goes under the name of workshops or seminars, which aim to focus on specific topics. The other key advantage is that attendance is not normally a problem. Once the learner is committed to the course, he or she tends to stay.

Extensive training normally refers to regular but short sessions, such as two 90-minute sessions per week. This is typical of some in-company training, but also for pre-experienced groups such as business studies students who are doing English as one part of a course of study. The advantage is that such classes cater for those learners who cannot find time to take an intensive course. The disadvantage is that attendance and motivation can be a problem. Many courses combine the two types, for example, learners may attend 90 minute extensive classes once a week throughout the year, but also have a three

In a business English class, the possible problem(s) may include:

Select the correct option

☐

materials

☐

All of the given options

☐

distractions

☐

Interruptions

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

problem

2 of 36

Teaching of Business Communication (ENG516)

33 / 211

learners to decide on the best way forward. At the end of all this effort, it is still inevitably vague. This vagueness can be a problem with a sponsor or learner who is paying for something well defined. This is getting something that looks a little bit rough around the edges. A teacher working with a sponsor must be aware of this, and must be able to produce a needs analysis which is businesslike and professional while at the same time being realistic and not making promises that cannot be met, particularly about what language teaching is and what it can achieve.

Tied to this is the problem of using ELT jargon; part of our job as teachers is to make sure we speak the same language as those who are paying for the training (sponsors). Learners and sponsors have other views of what the teacher's 'role' is, for example, or what the word 'grammar' means. This can be avoided by regular consultation, clarification, and negotiation.

BC220208584: ASMA BIBI

ENG516 - Teaching Business Communication (Quiz 1)

Quiz Start Time:

Question # 1 of 10 (Start time: 02:02:12 PM, 23 May 2023)

While designing a course of business communication, it is important to be aware of current performance ability in the course objectives.

Select the correct option

☐	teachers
☒	learners
☐	examiners
☐	parents

Click to Save Answer & Move

current per

1 of 1

keep in mind that people might have different objectives and how lack of attendance will affect the objectives.

Topic- 041: Performance (Behavioral) Objectives

There are different ways to express objectives, depending on the context. Most business English courses use performance (behavioral) objectives in terms of what the learner is expected to do, under what conditions, and to what level or standard. Such objectives use words like:

Will learn...

Will be able to...

Making objectives has to consider such questions as what learners would be able to do, how they would be able to perform, and at what level. It is important to know the current performance of learners. Assessing entry levels are important for two reasons. First it is the mostly, widely asked question by learners - How is my English? Secondly assessing a trainee's entry level is a prerequisite for course design. In other words, course objectives minus current ability should indicate/be equal to the course outline. It helps in designing the course, as course objectives minus current ability means course outline.

However, it is difficult to find a satisfactory assessment method to assess competence, as assessment is an area fraught with difficulties. There are no agreed criteria to scientifically assess what we teach. Our aim is to assess competence based around accuracy of language knowledge, fluency and effectiveness of communication). Accuracy can be tested objectively, whereas in fluency and effectiveness assessment, we rely on our subjective judgment. All evaluation must keep a balance between objectivity and subjectivity. Assessment at the entry level can be done through formal tests. Correct use of language, through listening and reading comprehension, writing skills, controlled or semi-controlled speaking can be used.

Learning styles are related to which is a collection of techniques, models, and theories based on how the mind works and how people communicate.

Select the correct option

☒	NLP
☐	LPN
☐	UNP
☐	PLN

Click to Save Answer & Move to related

6 of 67

making ongoing evaluations.

Topic- 034: Language Styles

Learning success depends on a number of factors. There are a number of different ways to look at learning styles. One is based on the findings of research into brain function, that the right and left sides of the brain play different roles in how we process information. Depending on which side of their brain is dominant, there are the 'left-brain' learners who tend to analyze, and to be logical and objective. They may prefer traditional lectures, reading, and clearly structured classroom activities and 'Right-brain' learners tend to be more impulsive and informal, and may appreciate the use of graphics and role-play activities to enhance their learning.

Learning styles are related to NLP (Neuro-Linguistic Programming), which is a collection of techniques, models, and theories based on how the mind works and how people behave and communicate. NLP has been useful to some business English teachers because of the insight it gives into various communication skills such as building rapport, non-verbal communication, active listening, and so on, but it can also help our learners understand how they perceive the world, and what affects that perception.

Howard Gardner's multiple intelligence theory provides another way to compare learners' learning needs, suggesting eight different types of intelligence: Bodily-Kinaesthetic, Intrapersonal, Interpersonal, Verbal-Linguistic, Logical-Mathematical, Musical, Visual-Spatial, and Naturalist.

Teachers can look at their learners in terms of these intelligences, and draw conclusions as to what learning styles and strategies might be most suitable. Of course, trainers will develop their understanding as the course progresses. So, for example, a learner who appears to function well in intrapersonal intelligence might benefit from activities which allow time for quiet self-study, and a person who is strong in logical-mathematical intelligence might benefit from activities which analyze language

Question # 3 of 10 (start time: 02:04:55 PM, 23 May 2023)

In business English, syllabus use varies according to:

Select the correct option

☐	Country
☐	Institution
☐	Context
☐	All the given options

syllabus va

1 of 1

Another way to negotiate the syllabus is to work on the existing objectives and refine them to suit the needs of a particular class. Content items can be changed, added or removed. A sample objectives document, based on pre-course discussions between employees of two companies, can be shared with students. They can look at the list which is a mixture of communication skills and specific content relevant only to the people concerned. The teacher can then raise questions to reconfirm this particular learner group's priorities, their needs of professional content and whether they want to add, remove or change any item.

Topic- 052: Using the Syllabus

The use of syllabus varies according to teaching context, country and institution. The human factor and individual characteristics are also factors as are resources, human and material, and the teaching approach. Where there are ample materials and resources to draw up a detailed syllabus, teachers may find it useful to work mainly from it as the basis of their teaching, using specific materials. In affluent settings, teachers may be allowed to complete freedom in designing their course program; in such cases the syllabus may be ignored or be non-existent. And teachers would have the freedom to draw their own new, independent program, based on their preferences and needs. With an experienced, competent and creative teacher and mature learners, such a program could be an exciting unique teaching/learning experience.

However, the disadvantages in most contexts outweigh the advantages. It means a prohibitive amount of work for the teacher. There might be some gaps in content. In a situation where the target language is not the second language (spoken outside the classroom) it may seriously impair learning. There is a lack of clear structure. Teachers and students both do not get a sense of progress, and evaluation of learning outcomes is difficult. Where only one book can be afforded by the students, it can act as the syllabus (particularly if recommended by the same authority which drew up the syllabus). In some contexts, even one book per student is an unknown luxury, then the teacher can base the course on

Question # 5 of 10 (start time: 02:06:45 PM, 23 May 2023)

One common tool for doing communication needs analysis is a test, which is a test designed to provide a comparison

Select the correct option

☐	summative
☐	formative
☐	placement
☐	cloze

Click to Save Ans

common tool

1 of 1

confidentiality exist. In face-to-face interaction or while observing a meeting, teachers can seek answers to previously thought out questions.

Topic - 032: Main Priorities

The other main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out the current communicative competence of learners. One common tool for this is a placement test, which is a test designed to provide a comparison with other learners (or with known standards or benchmarks) so that learners can be placed with others having similar needs and ability. Characteristics of a placement test are:

Validity: in that it should test what it is designed to test.

Face validity: Face validity is to be credible to the learner, if we give a grammar test to a learner who is interested to improve presentation skills, the prospective learner may start to question our judgment.

Authenticity: Tied with this is the question of authenticity, that the test should reflect the target language, and the way it is used (this is why a placement test should, ideally, follow the target situation analysis).

Reliability: It should be reliable so that if different testers do the same test, the result should be the same; likewise if the learner took the test two days later, they should get the same result.

Besides suiting the requirements of the learners' specific situation, other characteristics are that should be quick, and easy to administer. International tests are available for purchase and on the internet. Disadvantages is that they are tied to using particular course book or doing a particular course (they check

Question # 6 of 10 (start time: 02:07:45 PM, 23 May 2023)

The _____ analysis normally produces lists which have an important bearing on the cost of the course and distribution of

Select the correct option

☒	means
☐	cost
☐	needs
☐	evaluation

Click to Save

produces lis

1 of 2

learning styles of learners.

Teacher's Needs: What happens in the classroom is influenced to a very great extent by the trainer's own style, experience, and needs. An important part of a needs analysis depends on teachers' basic assumptions about teaching and learning. The BE teacher is basically a language expert, not a specialist in the core area, having experience in teaching general English. When teaching business English, the teacher has to adapt his/her learning style, and use strategies which can be passed on to learners. Being a reflective practitioner and having self-knowledge about own learning style is important. Teachers' role can be of trainer, coach and consultant.

A means analysis is a description of the training environment: what is available in terms of equipment, materials, facilities, and time. Means analysis normally produces lists which have an important bearing on the cost of the course and distribution of responsibilities. It entails looking at matters of coordination, availability, timings and preparation. Means analysis involves reflecting on key issues and personal/professional targets along the cline and methods for achieving them. Needs analysis is about making ongoing evaluations.

Topic- 034: Language Styles

Learning success depends on a number of factors. There are a number of different ways to look at learning styles. One is based on the findings of research into brain function, that the right and left sides of the brain play different roles in how we process information. Depending on which side of their brain is dominant, there are the 'left-brain' learners who tend to analyze, and to be logical and objective. They may prefer traditional lectures, reading, and clearly structured classroom activities and 'Right-brain' learners tend to be more impulsive and informal, and may appreciate the use of graphics and role-play activities to enhance their learning.

Learning styles are related to NLP (Neuro-Linguistic Programming), which is a collection of techniques, models, and theories based on how the mind works and how people behave and communicate. NLP has been useful to some business English teachers because of the insight it gives into various communication skills such as building rapport, non-verbal communication, active listening, and so on, but

BC220208584: ASMA BIBI

ENG516 - Teaching Business Communication (Quiz 1)

Quiz Star

Question # 8 of 10 (Start time: 02:09:11 PM, 23 May 2023)

While teaching a business communication course, there is no best way to do need analysis, no hard and fast rules

Select the correct option

☐	triple
☐	double
☒	single
☐	middle

Click to Save Answer

best way

5 of 10

.....

Analyzing learning needs includes looking at the learners' profile. Where will the Business English course take place and when will the course take place, are also part of analyzing needs. Analyzing learning needs includes looking into learners' purpose in taking this course. Is it to enter a job or for higher education? How do learners actually learn and what are the resources which are available to the teacher and learners to achieve success in the course?

Topic- 030: Uniqueness of Learning Situation

A needs analysis is unique to a specific training situation. There is no single best way to do it, no hard and fast rules. It entails exercising judgment and finding compromises to make the best use of resources in a particular teaching context. It is about working with learners to decide on the best way forward. At the end of all this effort, it is still inevitably vague in parts. This vagueness can be a problem with a sponsor or learner who is paying for something well defined, and is getting something that looks a little bit rough around the edges. A teacher working with companies must be aware of this, and must be able to produce a needs analysis which is businesslike and efficient, while at the same time being realistic and not making promises that cannot be met, particularly regarding what language teaching is and what it can achieve. Tied to this is the problem of using ELT jargon; part of our job as teachers is to make sure that we speak the same language as those paying for the training (sponsors). Learners and sponsors may have other views of what the teacher's 'role' is, for example, or what the word 'grammar' means. Conflict can be avoided by regular consultation, clarification, and negotiation.

Sometimes it is a problem for the teacher to satisfy the administration and company. So he/she has to make it business like and efficient, while at the same time remaining realistic and not making any promises that cannot be met, particularly what language teaching is and what it can achieve. Finding out the needs also depends on the class type. It might be an individual course, an open group (more or less homogeneous); or an open group (a public group, which draws its participants from a wide audience). Easier to find needs of the first two groups while more difficult with the third group.

Ethical questions include confidentiality, consent, and effect on careers. During a needs analysis teachers gain access to some often quite private or sensitive information, which might need to be handled

BC220208584: ASMA BIBI

ENG516 - Teaching Business Communication (Quiz 1)

Quiz Star

Question # 8 of 10 (Start time: 02:09:11 PM, 23 May 2023)

While teaching a business communication course, there is no best way to do need analysis, no hard and fast rules

Select the correct option

☐	triple
☐	double
☒	single
☐	middle

Click to Save Answer

best way

2 of 10

- What affective factors need to be considered?
- What methods should I be using?

As ever in language teaching, the answer probably draws on both perspectives. There are several possible ways of looking at needs analysis, but what is important is to appreciate what a needs analysis does. It does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do in the classroom. Indeed, the more we find out about our learners' needs, as inevitably happens as a course progresses, the more difficult it can seem to meet those needs. What a needs analysis does is offering a chance to focus on those areas which are more relevant to the learner or the company. It provides a series of snapshots, none of which gives the complete 'truth', but all of which contribute to our understanding. The more snapshots we take, the better our understanding.

The needs analysis differentiates a general English course from a course for specific purposes. On certain courses, it can also be used as a justification for what happens. A needs analysis is unique to a specific training situation. There is no standard model of needs analysis, and there is no 'single best way' to do it. A needs analysis is not an objective exercise; it entails exercising judgment and finding compromises to make the best use of resources in a particular teaching context. It is about working with learners to decide on the best way forward. At the end of all this effort, it is still inevitably vague in parts. This vagueness can be a problem with a sponsor or learner who is paying for something well defined, and

Which of the following objectives is concerned with timely completion?

Select the correct option

☐	Achievable
☒	Time-bound
☐	Realistic
☐	Relevant timely

1 of 6

abilities, resource facilities and logistics. When you identify objectives that are most important to you, you begin to figure out ways you can make them come true. The objective needs to be attainable by you based on the skills you have and the constraints imposed.

Relevant objectives in terms of leading to the desired results and relate to needs analysis, what is their current communicative proficiency and what they should be at the end of the course. This means two things; that the goal or target being set with the individual is something they can actually impact upon (change) and secondly it is also important to the organization, and is relevant to what the organization is trying to achieve. The manager has to decide these objectives by considering the wider picture.

Time-bound Objectives are concerned with timely completion: When do you want to achieve these set objectives? When will we accomplish/ complete this objective? In the objective somewhere, there has to be a date (Day/Month/Year) for when the task has to be started (if it's ongoing) and/or completed (if it's short term or project related). Time-bound means setting deadlines for the achievement of the objective. Deadlines need to be both achievable and realistic. If you don't set a time, you will reduce the motivation and urgency required to execute the tasks. Agreed time frames create the necessary urgency and prompt action.

Question # 10 of 10 (Start time: 02:11:10 PM, 23 May 2023)

In business English, to manage and break down the mass of knowledge into manageable chunks, we need criteria according to

Select the correct option

☐	situation
☐	topic
☐	skills and strategies
☐	all the given options

Click to Save

manageable

1 of 3

DESIGNING A COURSE-II*Topic- 043: Syllabus Design

Once the aims and objectives are established, the next step is to define a learning plan or a course syllabus. A syllabus is a document which says what should and will be learnt. Once we know what we want the course to achieve, we can move on to thinking about the syllabus. Why do we need a syllabus? One view says that the disadvantage of a syllabus is that it curbs the creativity of teachers and students. The disadvantages outweigh the advantages: some important content might be left, may result in significant gaps, let alone the prohibitive amount of work for the teacher.

Language is complex, we need to break it down into manageable units. In deciding the constituent parts of language, a syllabus provides a practical division of language, assessment, and activities. Having a syllabus gives confidence to teachers and learners by making the language learning task appear manageable. It also has a cosmetic role (students/sponsors want some reassurance that their investment of time and money will be worthwhile), showing that some effort has gone into its making. This is especially true of commercial sponsors.

A syllabus provides a criterion for material selection, defining the kinds of texts to look for and the type of materials to develop. Success or failure to achieve the state of knowledge can be tested. A syllabus provides a visible basis for testing. It gives a road map to the teachers and students - a visible goal and the means to achieve it. Uniformity is an essential condition for any institutionalized activity such as education and a syllabus is one way in which this standardization is achieved or at least attempted.

It is a list which specifies all the things that are to be taught in the course, for which the course was designed, e.g. whether it is designed for beginner levels, for 2nd semester students, for IT students and so on. It is comprehensive, covering these points, aims, objectives, texts, activities, evaluation methods. The actual contents may be content items (words, structures) or process items (methods, tasks).

Question # 1 of 10 (Start time: 04:04:09 PM, 23 May 2023)

Which of the following is the main stakeholder in the process of syllabus design?

Select the correct option

☐	Policy makers
☒	Learners
☐	Administration
☐	Teachers

Click to S

main sta

1 of 1

emphasizes the need for consensus and compromise, which are important elements in group work.

Topic- 050: Using Learner's Input

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the process, their input is crucial. It gives insight to the teacher about the pace of the course and course content. The teacher can give the class a questionnaire to fill questions about their own preferences, and then pass the sheets around so that everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that different people have different needs. This information is then used as the basis for a third question, the answer to which is in effect, the syllabus as generated by the group. It will be an amalgam of the different priorities that have surfaced. Generating the syllabus in this way brings home to the learners that what may happen is actually a compromise. Getting them to sign at the bottom of the page is a useful way to remind them that they are part of the success of the course. These sheets can be used to review the course later. Learners' priorities can change as the course progresses, especially in longer courses. They may come to know their strengths and weaknesses and needs. An in-service student can request to be given presentation practice as he might have to give one at his workplace. Similarly a student of the seventh or eighth semester who needs to write his final project would want a special space given to report writing skills. They are specialists in

5:49

VoLTE 4G 94

BC210427566: SIDRA AMIN

Time Left 76 sec(s)

ENG516 - Teaching Business Communication (Quiz 1)

Quiz Start Time: 04:04 PM, 23 May 2023

Question # 2 of 10 (start time: 04:05:23 PM, 23 May 2023)

Total Marks:

One common tool for doing communication needs analysis is a _____ test, which is a test designed to provide a comparison with other learners.

Select the correct option

☐	formative
☐	cloze
☐	summative
☒	placement

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

←

placement test

3 of 13

<

>

Topic - 032: Main Priorities

The other main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out the current communicative competence of learners. One common tool for this is a placement test, which is a test designed to provide a comparison with other learners (or with known standards or benchmarks) so that learners can be placed with others having similar needs and ability. Characteristics of a placement test are:

Validity: in that it should test what it is designed to test.

Face validity: Face validity is to be credible to the learner, if we give a grammar test to a learner who is interested to improve presentation skills, the prospective learner may start to question our judgment.

Authenticity: Tied with this is the question of authenticity, that the test should reflect the target language, and the way it is used (this is why a placement test should, ideally, follow the target situation analysis).

Reliability: It should be reliable so that if different testers do the same test, the result should be the same; likewise if the learner took the test two days later, they should get the same result.

Besides suiting the requirements of the learners' specific situation, other characteristics are that should be quick, and easy to administer. International tests are available for purchase and on the internet. Disadvantage is that they are tied to using particular course book or doing a particular course (they check the point at which the person can join the course). Others test with reference to guidelines and standards, such as the standards provided by the CEF (Common European Framework) or ACTFL (American Council for the Teaching of Foreign Languages). These tests are often adequate for assessing receptive language skills such as listening and reading, and can be used to get a rough idea of a level, but will not test people for specific job requirements. It is arguable how well they test productive skills. Most placement tests ignore intercultural competence completely.

Learning styles are related to _____, which is a collection of techniques, models, and theories based on how the mind works and how people behave and communicate.

Select the correct option

☒	NLP
☐	UNP
☐	LPN
☐	PLN

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

NLP

1 of 2

making ongoing evaluations.

Topic- 034: Language Styles

Learning success depends on a number of factors. There are a number of different ways to learn and different learning styles. One is based on the findings of research into brain function, that the right and left sides of the brain play different roles in how we process information. Depending on which side of the brain is dominant, there are the 'left-brain' learners who tend to analyze, and to be logical and objective. They may prefer traditional lectures, reading, and clearly structured classroom activities and 'Right-brain' learners tend to be more impulsive and informal, and may appreciate the use of graphics and role-play activities to enhance their learning.

Learning styles are related to NLP (Neuro-Linguistic Programming), which is a collection of techniques, models, and theories based on how the mind works and how people behave and communicate. NLP has been useful to some business English teachers because of the insight it gives into various communication skills such as building rapport, non-verbal communication, active listening, and so on. It can also help our learners understand how they perceive the world, and what affects that perception.

Howard Gardner's multiple intelligence theory provides another way to compare learners and their learning needs, suggesting eight different types of intelligence: Bodily-Kinaesthetic, Intrapersonal, Interpersonal, Verbal-Linguistic, Logical-Mathematical, Musical, Visual-Spatial, and Naturalist.

Teachers can look at their learners in terms of these intelligences, and draw conclusions about what learning styles and strategies might be most suitable. Of course, trainers will develop their understanding as the course progresses. So, for example, a learner who appears to function well in intrapersonal intelligence might benefit from activities which allow time for quiet self-study, and a person who is strong in logical-mathematical intelligence might benefit from activities which analyze language.

Question # 4 of 10 (Start time: 04:07:04 PM, 23 May 2023)

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the business English teaching process, their input gives insight to:

Select the correct option

☒	teacher
☐	administration
☐	leadership
☐	customer

Click to Save Answer

main sta

1 of 1

- Date:.....
- Signature:.....

Negotiating priorities - this time, the aim is to guide learners towards a possible syllabus by suggesting possible options. A variation on this is to give learners different options during the course: do they want to do this or that next week? Teachers might allow learners to develop their own tasks and activities. For example, if the course is covering presentation skills, the learners could make decisions about the topics of their own presentations, or the length, or the criteria for success. Such an approach emphasizes the need for consensus and compromise, which are important elements in group work.

Topic- 050: Using Learner's Input

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the process, their input is crucial. It gives insight to the teacher about the pace of the course and course content. The teacher can give the class a questionnaire to fill questions about their own preferences, and then pass the sheets around so that everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that different people have different needs. This information is then used as the basis for a third question, the answer to which is

Corporate clients are favorably _____ if the trainer they are dealing with knows something about the company's si

Select the correct option

☐	depressed
☒	impressed
☐	expressed
☐	appressed

Click to Save Answer & Move to

corporate

4 of 25

HR (Human Resources) manager. All of these have certain perspectives on what the learners will need to cover on a course. It is important to make it clear to sponsors and heads that their needs are recognized and will be addressed, while remaining realistic about what is promised. Businesses are interested in getting something worthwhile for their money. A company pays for training or an institution hires a teacher because it feels that the investment will lead to some sort of profit, be it more motivated workers, more effective negotiators, better presenters, managers, or high achieving students.

One way for the teacher is to understand business needs and learn about the company. This means doing some research. Ideally, this is done before starting to meet people. Corporate clients are favorably impressed if the trainer or language school they are dealing with knows something about the company's product, the market, and its size. With the internet, this is relatively easy to do but there are also imitations. Reading an annual report will give one perspective, but such documents are designed to tempt investors. Websites which are open to the public may not have all the details a teacher needs. At this stage, some basic information is needed, so that when we enter the company and start talking to people, we can demonstrate our professionalism and ask the right questions.

Business English teachers needed to understand the various business functions of those involved. The perspective of the engineering department will be very different from that of people in the financial department. Product information is also important. The engineers who build mobile phones will have a very different perspective from the one we may have as a user. They will be interested in materials, technical specifications, and so on. The financial people will be more interested in the last auditors' report, and next week's balance sheet.

Company's hierarchy is important to be understood and the level of learners in the company hierarchy is also relevant. A high-level manager in a multinational corporation will not have the same needs as a person on the shop floor, even if they both have the same marks in a language placement test. The high level manager needs would be perhaps to polish his presentation skills, and he/she might be in position to dictate their needs, while the shop-floor person might need to have sales needs. Stakeholders

While teaching a business communication course, there is no _____ best way to do need analysis, no hard and fast rules

Select the correct option

- ☐ triple
- ☐ double
- ☒ single
- ☐ middle

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Qu

best way

2 of 10

THE NEEDS ANALYSIS IS VAGUE.

As ever in language teaching, the answer probably draws on both perspectives. There are several possible ways of looking at needs analysis, but what is important is to appreciate what a needs analysis does. It does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do in the classroom. Indeed, the more we find out about our learners' needs, as inevitably happens as a course progresses, the more difficult it can seem to meet those needs. What a needs analysis does is offering a chance to focus on those areas which are more relevant to the learner or the company. It provides a series of snapshots, none of which gives the complete 'truth', but all of which contribute to our understanding. The more snapshots we take, the better our understanding.

The needs analysis differentiates a general English course from a course for specific purposes. On certain courses, it can also be used as a justification for what happens. A needs analysis is unique to a specific training situation. There is no standard model of needs analysis, and there is no 'single best way' to do it. A needs analysis is not an objective exercise; it entails exercising judgment and finding compromises to make the best use of resources in a particular teaching context. It is about working with learners to decide on the best way forward. At the end of all this effort, it is still inevitably vague in parts.

Question # 7 of 10 (Start time: 04:09:23 PM, 23 May 2023)

Different types of communication situations give rise to types of communication needs.

Select the correct option

☒	different
☐	unique
☐	primary
☐	same

Click to Save Ans

give rise to

1 of 1

Lesson 06

NEEDS ANALYSIS-II

c - 031: Communication Needs

Before we start teaching a course there is certain information which we need to have in the shape of needs analysis which includes communication needs, business needs and pedagogical needs of learners and teachers. Information is of two types. First: Target situation and types of discourse. Second: Current competence – to find the gap – on which depends the syllabus objectives.

Different types of communication situations give rise to different types of communication needs. Modern organization uses a range of communication channels - traditional like letters and reports and telephone as well as modern like the internet, intranet, fax, instant messages etc.

To analyze communication needs of learners is to find out as much as possible about what the learners of the course will need to do in English. For example, learners working in a business organization need to be able to use the telephone with English-speaking clients, or they may need to travel to other countries in order to sell their product. Students in a BE course would need to be able to write documents in their core courses area. Students engaged in research would need writing skills to write a dissertation.

Needs analysis also aims to find out the different areas and styles of discourse that learners might use in. This will not only give a better idea about the target situation, but will also address the learner's own need to understand what the learners actually do with the language. Communicative competence has several layers, of which language is only one.

A variety of tools can be used, including questionnaires, interviews, and observation. Many

Question # 8 of 10 (Start time: 04:09:59 PM, 23 May 2023)

2. Key principal for a Business English course is to focus on _____ of language items instead of talking about them.

Select the correct option

☐	confirmance
☒	performance
☐	pre-performance
☐	conformance

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next

performance

12 of 39

Les

TUTORING A COURSE-III

Topic- 085: Giving Feedback

Feedback is information given to the learner about his/her performance with the obj of improving performance. It has two components - Assessment, in which you simply inform how bad the learner has performed, and gives a grade like 70% or a comment like "good", "fair". In c more specific information on learner's performance is given through explanation, of pro alternatives or eliciting from learners. It tells of what the learners did right and what wa Different teaching methodologies e.g. audiolingualism, humanistic methodologies, and skills t etc. offer different approaches to assessment. Training can be seen as a close-looped system, con the following stages:

Question # 9 of 10 (Start time: 04:11:13 PM, 23 May 2023)

Total Ma

While designing a course of business communication, it is important to be aware of _____ current performance ability in the target area before designing course objectives.

Select the correct option

☒	learners'
☐	examiners'
☐	teachers'
☐	parents'

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

← current performance 1 of 1 < >

Topic- 041: Performance (Behavioral) Objectives

There are different ways to express objectives, depending on the context. Most business English courses use performance (behavioral) objectives in terms of what the learner is expected to do, under what conditions, and to what level or standard. Such objectives use words like:

Will learn...

Will be able to...

Making objectives has to consider such questions as what learners would be able to do, how they would be able to perform, and at what level. It is important to know the current performance of learners. Assessing entry levels are important for two reasons. First it is the mostly, widely asked question by learners - How is my English? Secondly assessing a trainee's entry level is a prerequisite for course design. In other words, course objectives minus current ability should indicate/be equal to the course outline. It helps in designing the course, as course objectives minus current ability means course outline.

However, it is difficult to find a satisfactory assessment method to assess competence, as assessment is an area fraught with difficulties. There are no agreed criteria to scientifically assess what we teach. Our aim is to assess competence based around accuracy of language knowledge, fluency and effectiveness of communication). Accuracy can be tested objectively, whereas in fluency and effectiveness assessment, we rely on our subjective judgment. All evaluation must keep a balance between objectivity and subjectivity. Assessment at the entry level can be done through formal tests. Correct use of language, through listening and reading comprehension, writing skills, controlled or semi-controlled speaking can be used.

Question # 1 of 10 (Start time: 04:15:43 PM, 23 May 2023)

In business English communication teaching, an intensive course is designed for:

Select the correct option

- ☐ short periods
- ☒ a, b & c
- ☐ Specific objectives
- ☐ Improvement

← intensive training 2 of 4 < >

some teachers, particularly freelancers, will often be heavily involved in administration. Simple things like a broken monitor or shoddy materials, an electric socket which doesn't work can easily ruin a course, however well the syllabus has been thought out. Similarly, issues such as costs and budgets may have a significant influence on the course design; using an expensive 5-star hotel provides a very different learning experience to using a small classroom in the depths of a private language school or a spare conference room in company offices. Business English learners expect a high level of professionalism in the way a course is run, and such professionalism can and should be designed into the course.

One decision which needs to be made is whether the teaching is to be intensive or extensive. In practice, in the world of business English teaching, the terms seem to be used differently by different organizations. Intensive training can be anything from a few hours a day, for a few weeks, to ten days in a hotel, working all day. Intensive training is often used where time is short and where there are specific performance objectives to achieve. It tends to be much more focused than extensive training, and is often more efficient in its use of time (no need to warm learners up every 90 minutes, for example). For many learners, intensive training leads to noticeable improvement. Often intensive training goes under the name of workshops or seminars, which aim to focus on specific topics. The other key advantage is that attendance is not normally a problem. Once the learner is committed to the course, he or she tends to stay.

Extensive training normally refers to regular but short sessions, such as two 90-minute sessions per week. This is typical of some in-company training, but also for pre-experienced groups such as

← to establish the 1 of 1 < >

Topic- 025: What are Needs? What are Target Needs?

The difference between Business English (BE) and General English (GE) courses is basically that Business English aims to fulfill the needs of business and management students. What are these needs? The basic aim of a needs analysis is to collect and examine critically, information about the current situation (where the students are at present) and the target situation (where they would like to be at the end of the teaching).

Needs analysis, carried out to establish the "what" and the "how" of a course, is the first stage in Business Communication course development, followed by curriculum design, materials selection, methodology, assessment, and evaluation. However, these stages should not be seen as separate, but as proceeding in a linear fashion. They come at the pre-course stage. The teacher needs to know the needs of the learners so that the objectives of the course may be decided. Business English learners have more precisely defined needs than general English learners and these needs should be incorporated in the course objectives. It is useful to see the needs analysis stage as consisting of three separate but linked elements:

- The range of communication and language required in the learner's present of future profession.
- The current ability of the learner in terms of language and communication.
- The actual objective of the training program

In order to find this we need to address the following questions:

- What type of information do we need to get?
- How can we get this information?
- How can we translate this information into course objectives?

The scope of Business English has been summarized as developing language knowledge and communication skills.

Which of the following objectives is concerned with timely completion?

Select the correct option

☐	Achievable
☐	Realistic
☐	Relevant
☒	Time-bound

timely

1 of 1...

Achievable objectives see whether set objectives are achievable and attainable in terms of ties, realistic facilities and logistics. When you identify objectives that are most important to you, you need to figure out ways you can make them come true. The objective needs to be attainable by you based on the skills you have and the constraints imposed.

Relevant objectives in terms of leading to the desired results and relate to needs analysis, what is your current communicative proficiency and what they should be at the end of the course. This means two things; that the goal or target being set with the individual is something they can actually impact upon or manage and secondly it is also important to the organization, and is relevant to what the organization is trying to achieve. The manager has to decide these objectives by considering the wider picture.

Time-bound Objectives are concerned with timely completion: When do you want to achieve the objectives? When will we accomplish/ complete this objective? In the objective somewhere, there has to be a date (Day/Month/Year) for when the task has to be started (if it's ongoing) and/or completed (if it's short term or project related). Time-bound means setting deadlines for the achievement of the objective. Deadlines need to be both achievable and realistic. If you don't set a time, you will reduce the motivation and urgency required to execute the tasks. Agreed time frames create the necessary urgency and prompt action.

← designing 5 of 22 < >

DESIGNING A COURSE

Topic- 037: Aims

Designing a Business English course is a matter of making a series of decisions based on information gathered during a needs analysis about learners' communication, business and pedagogical needs. The next step is to interpret that data, design a course program and choose appropriate materials. A needs analysis has a direct influence on course design – the development of syllabus, materials methodology and evaluation. A useful place to start is to decide on the course aims and objectives: what we (and others) want out of the course.

Course design is the process through which the raw data about a learning need is interpreted in order to produce a series of teaching learning experiences, aiming to lead the students to a particular state of knowledge. Care is needed as there is no one-to-one transfer from needs analysis to course design as there is conflict between learner needs and learner wants. There are external constraints (like classroom facilities/time) that will restrict what is happening.

Aims for a Business English course are general statements about why the course is happening. What are the overall aims which the course aims to achieve? A certain degree of specificity is required in designing a BE course, therefore pedagogically it comes under the umbrella of ESP. Related to this specificity is the choice of the content, the language to be used and taught, and the training style. Content (which has to be related to the area) Language (discourse used in the area), communication (effective as per requirement of workplace) as well as the training style will depend on the initial needs analysis. Aims of a course depend on a large degree to the approach which is taken for a course design. Various approaches have been used to design courses. The language centered course design (most familiar to teachers, simplest) draws a direct connection between needs analysis of the target situation and course contents. The learner is used as a means to identify the target situation. Instead of teaching the whole area as in a general English course, only the restricted area is taught and the learner has no further role to play. It seems logical as it aims to start with the learner's needs, proceeds through various stages of analysis to

← business English class 4 of 9 < >

Topic- 080: Classification of Learning Styles

As educators we are familiar with categorization of learners according to the following categories of perceptual learners:

- Auditory Learners
- Visual Learners
- Tactile Learners
- Kinesthetic Learners

It is important to see them as connected as learners will have many different styles. 73 / 211 are also influenced by the culture of the learners. In Asian cultures, the teacher is seen as an answer, whereas in Western cultures the teacher is seen as a facilitator, which means learners have more autonomy. Styles are culturally motivated, can lead to conflict in L2 classes made up of students from different cultures. As the four learner types are spread evenly in population, so a business English class can be planned according to the stages defined in lesson planning. However, teachers have to adapt their lessons according to learning styles of learners.

Question # 1 of 10 (Start time: 04:47:46 PM, 23 May 2023)

2. Key principal for a Business English course is to focus on _____ of language items instead of talking about them

Select the correct option

- ☐ conformance
- ☐ confirmance
- ☐ pre-performance
- ☒ performance

performance

10 of 51

keep in mind that people might have different objectives and how lack of attendance will affect the objectives.

Topic- 041: Performance (Behavioral) Objectives

There are different ways to express objectives, depending on the context. Most business English courses use performance (behavioral) objectives in terms of what the learner is expected to do, under what conditions, and to what level or standard. Such objectives use words like:

Will learn...

Will be able to...

Making objectives has to consider such questions as what learners would be able to do, how they would be able to perform, and at what level. It is important to know the current performance of learners. Assessing entry levels are important for two reasons. First it is the mostly, widely asked question by learners - How is my English? Secondly assessing a trainee's entry level is a prerequisite for course design. In other words, course objectives minus current ability should indicate/be equal to the course outline. It helps in designing the course, as course objectives minus current ability means course outline.

However, it is difficult to find a satisfactory assessment method to assess competence, as assessment is an area fraught with difficulties. There are no agreed criteria to scientifically assess what we teach. Our aim is to assess competence based around accuracy of language knowledge, fluency and effectiveness of communication). Accuracy can be tested objectively, whereas in fluency and effectiveness assessment, we rely on our subjective judgment. All evaluation must keep a balance between objectivity and subjectivity. Assessment at the entry level can be done through formal tests. Correct use of language, through listening and reading comprehension, writing skills, controlled or semi-controlled speaking can be used.

← needs analysis 8 of 70 < >

Topic- 025: What are Needs? What are Target Needs?

The difference between Business English (BE) and General English (GE) courses is basically that Business English aims to fulfill the needs of business and management students. What are these needs? The basic aim of a needs analysis is to collect and examine critically, information about the current situation (where the students are at present) and the target situation (where they would like to be at the end of the teaching).

Needs analysis, carried out to establish the "what" and the "how" of a course, is the first stage in Business Communication course development, followed by curriculum design, materials selection, methodology, assessment, and evaluation. However, these stages should not be seen as separate, but as proceeding in a linear fashion. They come at the pre-course stage. The teacher needs to know the needs of the learners so that the objectives of the course may be decided. Business English learners have more precisely defined needs than general English learners and these needs should be incorporated in the course objectives. It is useful to see the needs analysis stage as consisting of three separate but linked elements:

- The range of communication and language required in the learner's present or future profession.
- The current ability of the learner in terms of language and communication.
- The actual objective of the training program.

In order to find this we need to address the following questions:

- What type of information do we need to get?
- How can we get this information?
- How can we translate this information into course objectives?

The scope of Business English has been summarized as developing language knowledge and communication skills:

- General Language Knowledge
- Specialist Language Knowledge
- General Communication Skills

Question # 3 of 10 (Start time: 04:49:37 PM, 23 May 2023)

In business English, syllabus use varies according to:

Select the correct option

- ☒ All the given options
- ☐ Institution
- ☐ Context
- ☐ Country

varies

2 of 7...

Teachers may also regenerate the syllabus to work on the existing objectives and revise them to suit the needs of a particular class. Content items can be changed, added or removed. A sample objectives document, based on pre-course discussions between employees of two companies, can be shared with students. They can look at the list which is a mixture of communication skills and specific content relevant only to the people concerned. The teacher can then raise questions to reconfirm this particular learner group's priorities, their needs of professional content and whether they want to add, remove or change any item.

Topic- 052: Using the Syllabus

The use of syllabus varies according to teaching context, country and institution. The human factor and individual characteristics are also factors as are resources, human and material, and the teaching approach. Where there are ample materials and resources to draw up a detailed syllabus, teachers may find it useful to work mainly from it as the basis of their teaching, using specific materials. In affluent settings, teachers may be allowed to complete freedom in designing their course program; in such cases the syllabus may be ignored or be non-existent. And teachers would have the freedom to draw their own new, independent program, based on their preferences and needs. With an experienced, competent and creative teacher and mature learners, such a program could be an exciting unique teaching/learning experience.

However, the disadvantages in most contexts outweigh the advantages. It means a prohibitive amount of work for the teacher. There might be some gaps in content. In a situation where the target language is not the second language (spoken outside the classroom) it may seriously impair learning. There is a lack of clear structure. Teachers and students both do not get a sense of progress, and evaluation of learning outcomes is difficult. Where only one book can be afforded by the students, it can act as the syllabus (particularly if recommended by the same authority which drew up the syllabus). In some contexts, even one book per student is an unknown luxury, then the teacher can base the course on of knowledge. Care is needed as there is no one-to-one transfer from needs analysis to course design as there is conflict between learner needs and learner wants. There are external constraints (like classroom facilities/time) that will restrict what is happening.

← connection between 1 of 1 < >

Aims for a Business English course are general statements about why the course is happening. What are the overall aims which the course aims to achieve? A certain degree of specificity is required in designing a BE course, therefore pedagogically it comes under the umbrella of ESP. Related to this specificity is the choice of the content, the language to be used and taught, and the training style. Content, (which has to be related to the area) Language (discourse used in the area), communication (effective as per requirement of workplace) as well as the training style will depend on the initial needs analysis. Aims of a course depend on a large degree to the approach which is taken for a course design. Various approaches have been used to design courses. The language centered course design (most familiar to teachers, simplest) draws a direct connection between needs analysis of the target situation and course contents. The learner is used as a means to identify the target situation. Instead of teaching the whole area as in a general English course, only the restricted area is taught and the learner has no further role to play. It seems logical as it aims to start with the learner's needs, proceeds through various stages of analysis to syllabus, to materials and then evaluation.

However, it covers only a restricted area of language to be taught to learners unlike in GE. Learners' needs are not catered at all. It seems learner-centered but actually after using the learner to identify the target area, it ignores the learner. It fails to recognize that learners are people and that learning is not a systematic process, causing the belief that learning itself is systematic. Learning is internally-generated and not an externally-imposed system. Analysis and presentation of language data items in a systematic manner will not result in a systematic learning. It takes a rigid and inflexible view of the procedure of a course design and doesn't allow any reconsidering along the course and the teacher is locked into a relentless process. Any procedure should have flexibility, feedback channels and error tolerance. Another thing which is important in teaching is that material should be interesting, something which is not always met in a language centered course design. Thus language centered needs analysis is only at the surface level - it is in fact a learner-restricted approach.

In business English, a syllabus organized topic wise covers:

Select the correct option

☒	all the given options
☐	activities
☐	vocabulary
☐	related area

organized

2 of 17

ponents should reflect topics, themes, situations and define types of assessments, and design learning activities and tasks. The syllabus should provide contact information to the instructor, list office hours (including office hours if possible, which includes time spent in marking), and state the current academic term. It should include the authors and titles of prescribed books, list all assignments, quizzes exams, and include course schedule, departmental requirements. The learning activities and tasks which help learners develop their communicative competence – linguistic, socio-cultural and pragmatic.

Those language items are selected which the learner needs to know and concentrate on the content and the meaning of the interactions. A syllabus can be organized in various ways: According to topic, task or around activities, such as presentations, negotiations and telephoning.

Topic- 045: What is to be Covered and in what Order

The course objectives point to what we want the course to achieve. Once we know what we want to achieve, we can move on to thinking about the syllabus. A syllabus is, essentially, a list of what is to be covered and in what order. The course should focus on the language needed. In Business English teaching the focus should be on using language to perform tasks, not just to talk about it. Most Business English learners need to be able to communicate within a certain context, so the syllabus must reflect the discourse that the learner will face in the workplace.

The language needs to be learnable, and according to the level of the learners. Learning must be achievable in the time provided, e.g. it is unrealistic to suggest that a complete beginner will be able to take part in complex negotiations after a week's teaching.

look like. Unlike the previous two examples, this somewhat formal report has been written so that someone else can take over the running of the course. Some of the key course design decisions already appear to have been made, which partly reflect the priorities and conditions laid down by the sponsor, Mr Lambada. This report illustrates once again the difficulty of making a clear divide between information gathering, and course design: in practice, the two are often inextricably linked.

Needs analysis should not be seen as an entirely objective procedure, as Hyland reminds us, 'Needs analysis is like any other classroom practice in that it involves decisions based on teachers' interests, values, and beliefs about teaching, learning and language.' So the needs analysis is preparatory and ongoing. It is the foundation of any business English course. It considers different tools that teachers can use to collect a series of snapshots, which allow them to compare a target situation with a current situation, thus leading to a focused course.

DESIGNING A COURSE-I

bound

2 of 7

Topic- 039: Smart Objectives

Many organizations are increasingly using the SMART and SMARTER acronym within goal setting and performance appraisal in management environments. The use of SMART objective is not limited to business and performance management, indeed SMART possibly started in the world of personal development. SMARTER is an acronym to help in the writing of objectives, which can be for managing performance or for developmental purposes. Objectives should be specific, measurable, achievable, relevant, and time-bound, to specify what they need to achieve, answering six questions: Who? What? Where? When? Which? Why?

A specific objective has a much greater chance of being accomplished than a general goal. To set a specific objective you need to answer the six "W" questions: Who: Who is involved? What: What do I want to accomplish? Where: Identify a location. When: Establish a time frame. Which: Identify requirements and constraints. Why: Specific reasons, purpose or benefits of accomplishing the goal. Instead of saying: "Awareness of ..." it should be "Learners will be able to speak about the ..." Rules of conciseness and correctness should be applied.

Measurable objectives measure whether objectives are met or not. They establish concrete criteria for measuring progress toward the attainment of each objective you set. When you measure your progress, you stay on track, reach your target dates, and experience the feeling of achievement that drives you on to continued effort required to reach your objective. To determine if your objective is measurable, ask questions such how much? How many? How will I know when it is accomplished? If the objective is measurable, it means that the measurement source is identified and we are able to track the actions as we

← syllabus varies | 1 of 1... < >

Another way to negotiate the syllabus is to work on the existing objectives and relate them to the needs of a particular class. Content items can be changed, added or removed. A sample objective document, based on pre-course discussions between employees of two companies, can be shared with students. They can look at the list which is a mixture of communication skills and specific content relevant only to the people concerned. The teacher can then raise questions to reconfirm this particular learner group's priorities, their needs of professional content and whether they want to add, remove or change any item.

Topic- 052: Using the Syllabus

52 / 211

The use of syllabus varies according to teaching context, country and institution. The human factor and individual characteristics are also factors as are resources, human and material, and teaching approach. Where there are ample materials and resources to draw up a detailed syllabus, teachers may find it useful to work mainly from it as the basis of their teaching, using specific material in affluent settings, teachers may be allowed to complete freedom in designing their course program; in cases the syllabus may be ignored or be non-existent. And teachers would have the freedom to draw up a new, independent program, based on their preferences and needs. With an experienced, competent and creative teacher and mature learners, such a program could be an exciting unique teaching/learning experience.

However, the disadvantages in most contexts outweigh the advantages. It means a prohibitive amount of work for the teacher. There might be some gaps in content. In a situation where the target language is not the second language (spoken outside the classroom) it may seriously impair learning. There is a lack of clear structure. Teachers and students both do not get a sense of progress, evaluation of learning outcomes is difficult. Where only one book can be afforded by the students, it can act as the syllabus (particularly if recommended by the same authority which drew up the syllabus). In some contexts, even one book per student is an unknown luxury, then the teacher can base the course

The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency can be referred as the learner's

Select the correct option

☐	necessities
☐	gaps
☐	wants
☐	lacks

← existing proficiency 2 of 2 < >

proficiency in other words needs to be matched against the existing proficiency of the learners. The gap between the two can be referred to as the learner's lacks.

c. Wants: So far we have looked at target needs objectively with no active role by the learners. But learners too have a view of what their needs are - their wants. We have stressed that it is the awareness of the need that characterizes the ESP situation. Awareness is a matter of individual perception. Learners may have a clear idea about the 'necessities' of the target situation; they will certainly have a view as to what they want. It is quite possible that the learners' views will conflict with the perception of other interested parties: course designers, sponsors, and teachers.

So in any course the need is what Hutchinson says: to give what the learner lacks. One should also know what the learner knows already so that what he/she lacks can be determined. The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency is called the learners' "lack". A main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out how good the learners' language use is, what is their current communicative competence? Using of placement tests which have validity, face validity, authenticity, reliable, is important. Wants are learners own view of what they "want" from the course, which might be in conflict with the course and the instructor's perceptions of learners' necessities and lacks.

Topic- 029: Analyzing Learning Needs

Learning needs can be analyzed by using different tools to collect a series of snapshots which allow them to compare a target situation with the current situation, thus leading to a focused course. After gathering information through forms, questionnaires, interviews, observation tests etc. the teacher has to analyze learners' needs. The data acquired does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do, so it becomes more difficult as the course progresses. A needs analysis provides a series of snapshots which contribute to our understanding. It differentiates a General English course from ESP course and provides connection |

1 of 1

order to produce a series of teaching learning experiences, aiming to lead the students to a particular state of knowledge. Care is needed as there is no one-to-one transfer from needs analysis to course design as there is conflict between learner needs and learner wants. There are external constraints (like classroom facilities/time) that will restrict what is happening.

Aims for a Business English course are general statements about why the course is happening. What are the overall aims which the course aims to achieve? A certain degree of specificity is required in designing a BE course, therefore pedagogically it comes under the umbrella of ESP. Related to this specificity is the choice of the content, the language to be used and taught, and the training style. Content, (which has to be related to the area) Language (discourse used in the area), communication (effective as per requirement of workplace) as well as the training style will depend on the initial needs analysis. Aims of a course depend on a large degree to the approach which is taken for a course design. Various approaches have been used to design courses. The language centered course design (most familiar to teachers, simplest) draws a direct connection between needs analysis of the target situation and course contents. The learner is used as a means to identify the target situation. Instead of teaching the whole area as in a general English course, only the restricted area is taught and the learner has no further role to play. It seems logical as it aims to start with the learner's needs, proceeds through various stages of analysis to syllabus, to materials and then evaluation.

However, it covers only a restricted area of language to be taught to learners unlike in GE. Learners' needs are not catered at all. It seems learner-centered but actually after using the learner to identify the target area, it ignores the learner. It fails to recognize that learners are people and that learning is not a systematic process, causing the belief that learning itself is systematic. Learning is internally-generated and not an externally-imposed system. Analysis and presentation of language data items in a systematic manner will not result in a systematic learning. It takes a rigid and inflexible view of the procedure of a course design and doesn't allow any reconsidering along the course and the teacher is locked into a relentless process. Any procedure should have flexibility, feedback channels and error tolerance. Another thing which is important in teaching is that material should be interesting, something which is not always met in a language centered course design. Thus language centered needs analysis is only at the surface level - it is in fact a learner-restricted approach.

Question # 5 of 10 (Start time: 05:17:34 PM, 23 May 2023)

A grid or framework sets out the aims and objectives, followed by all the _____ that we believe someone to be able to meet those objectives.

Select the correct option

☐	enlistments
☐	enrollments
☐	embodiments
☐	elements

grid

4 of 5

and their situation.

Topic- 046: Using a Grid

A useful technique is to use a grid or framework in making a syllabus. A grid or framework sets out the aims and objectives, followed by all the elements that we believe are necessary for someone to be able to meet those objectives. The main components of this framework are based on the competencies identified as: Linguistic competence (Language based), Discourse competence (identification of possible discourse learners will encounter, specialist knowledge) and Intercultural competence (communication needs in international business/educational environment).

The syllabus will take into account not only what is to be learnt but how it is to be learnt and how it will be assessed in terms of achieving course objectives, using the guidelines offered by communicative language teaching and the insights gained through the needs analysis. Grids normally consist of a combination of the following components, sometimes called threads, because they weave through the course and could be seen as holding it together:

- Grammar (e.g. tenses, word order, verb patterns, relative clauses)
- Lexis (e.g. vocabulary, idioms, expressions, collocations)
- Pronunciation (e.g. intonation, rhythm, stress, chunking)
- Functions (e.g. complaining, agreeing, persuading, explaining)
- Business skills (e.g. presenting, negotiating, telephoning, socializing)
- Topics (e.g. finance, marketing, production, management)
- Learning strategies (e.g. learning styles, recording vocabulary, preparing for a test)
- Situations (e.g. assisting visitors, checking into a hotel, running a meeting)
- Texts (e.g. examples of spoken or written discourse)
- Language skills (e.g. reading, writing, listening, speaking)
- Intercultural skills (defining, comparing culture)
- Storyline approach (materials have characters for the storyline)
- Tasks (learners use language to do something and achieve an outcome)

At the end, there is a column for methodology and timings.

varies

2 of 2...

the needs of a particular class. Content items can be changed, added or removed. A sample objectives document, based on pre-course discussions between employees of two companies, can be shared with students. They can look at the list which is a mixture of communication skills and specific content relevant only to the people concerned. The teacher can then raise questions to reconfirm this particular learner group's priorities, their needs of professional content and whether they want to add, remove or change any item.

Topic- 052: Using the Syllabus

The use of syllabus varies according to teaching context, country and factor and individual characteristics are also factors as are resources, human a 52 / 211 an the teaching approach. Where there are ample materials and resources to draw up a detailed syllabus, teachers may find it useful to work mainly from it as the basis of their teaching, using specific materials. In affluent settings, teachers may be allowed to complete freedom in designing their course program; in such cases the syllabus may be ignored or be non-existent. And teachers would have the freedom to draw their own new, independent program, based on their preferences and needs. With an experienced, competent and creative teacher and mature learners, such a program could be an exciting unique teaching/learning experience.

However, the disadvantages in most contexts outweigh the advantages. It means a prohibitive amount of work for the teacher. There might be some gaps in content. In a situation where the target language is not the second language (spoken outside the classroom) it may seriously impair learning. There is a lack of clear structure. Teachers and students both do not get a sense of progress, and evaluation of learning outcomes is difficult. Where only one book can be afforded by the students, it can act as the syllabus (particularly if recommended by the same authority which drew up the syllabus). In some contexts, even one book per student is an unknown luxury, then the teacher can base the course on

In business communication while designing a course, SMART Objectives are kept _____ bound.

Select the correct option

time

space

person

organization

Smart obje

3 of 3

Topic- 039: Smart Objectives

Many organizations are increasingly using the SMART and SMARTER acronym within goal setting and performance appraisal in management environments. The use of SMART objective is not limited to business and performance management, indeed SMART possibly started in the world of personal development. SMARTER is an acronym to help in the writing of objectives, which can be for managing performance or for developmental purposes. Objectives should be specific, measurable, achievable, relevant, and time-bound, to specify what they need to achieve, answering six questions: Who? What? Where? When? Which? Why?

A specific objective has a much greater chance of being accomplished than a general goal. To set a specific objective you need to answer the six "W" questions: Who: Who is involved? What: What do I want to accomplish? Where: Identify a location. When: Establish a time frame. Which: Identify requirements and constraints. Why: Specific reasons, purpose or benefits of accomplishing the goal. Instead of saying: "Awareness of ..." it should be "Learners will be able to speak about the ..." Rules of conciseness and correctness should be applied.

Measurable objectives measure whether objectives are met or not. They establish concrete criteria for measuring progress toward the attainment of each objective you set. When you measure your progress, you stay on track, reach your target dates, and experience the feeling of achievement that drives you on to continued effort required to reach your objective. To determine if your objective is measurable, ask questions such how much? How many? How will I know when it is accomplished? If the objective is measurable, it means that the measurement source is identified and we are able to track the actions as we progress towards the objective. Measurement is the standard used for comparison. Measurements (and the visible progress) go a long way to help us to know when we have achieved our objective.

Achievable objectives see whether set objectives are achievable and attainable in terms of abilities, realistic facilities and logistics. When you identify objectives that are most important to you, you

The course _____ point to what we want the course to achieve.

Select the correct option

☐	outline
☐	design
☐	units
☒	objectives

what we want

2 of 4

components should reflect topics, themes, situations and define types of assessments, and design learning activities and tasks. The syllabus should provide contact information to the instructor, list office hours (virtual office hours if possible, which includes time spent in marking), and state the current academic term. It should include the authors and titles of prescribed books, list all assignments, quizzes exams, include course schedule, departmental requirements. The learning activities and tasks which help learners develop their communicative competence – linguistic, socio-cultural and pragmatic.

Those language items are selected which the learner needs to know and concentrate on the content and the meaning of the interactions. A syllabus can be organized in various ways: According to 47 / 211 or around activities, such as presentations, negotiations and telephoning.

Topic- 045: What is to be Covered and in what Order

The course objectives point to what we want the course to achieve. Once we know what we want to achieve, we can move on to thinking about the syllabus. A syllabus is, essentially, a list of what is to be covered and in what order. The course should focus on the language needed. In Business English teaching the focus should be on using language to perform tasks, not just to talk about it. Most Business English learners needed to be able to communicate within a certain context, so the syllabus must reflect the discourse that the learner will face in the workplace.

The language needs to be learnable, and according to the level of the learners. Learning must be achievable in the time provided, e.g. it is unrealistic to suggest that a complete beginner will be able to take part in complex negotiations after a week's teaching.

← different types 4 of 13... < >

Lesson 06

NEEDS ANALYSIS-II

Topic - 031: Communication Needs

Before we start teaching a course there is certain information which we need to have in the shape of needs analysis which includes communication needs, business needs and pedagogical needs of learners and teachers. Information is of two types. First: Target situation and types of discourse. Second: Current competence – to find the gap – on which depends the syllabus objectives.

Different types of communication situations give rise to different types of communication needs. A modern organization uses a range of communication channels - traditional like letters and reports and the telephone as well as modern like the internet, intranet, fax, instant messages etc.

To analyze communication needs of learners is to find out as much as possible about what the learners of the course will need to do in English. For example, learners working in a business organization may need to be able to use the telephone with English-speaking clients, or they may need to travel to other countries in order to sell their product. Students in a BE course would need to be able to write assignments in their core courses area. Students engaged in research would need writing skills to write their dissertation.

Needs analysis also aims to find out the different areas and styles of discourse that learners might engage in. This will not only give a better idea about the target situation, but will also address the teacher's own need to understand what the learners actually do with the language. Communicative competence has several layers, of which language is only one.

A variety of tools can be used, including questionnaires, interviews, and observation. Many schools provide teachers forms and charts to carry out needs analysis. Commercially available tests are also used to carry out needs analysis. Charts are useful because they allow teachers to compare their subjects' current communicative ability and target needs, and thus find the gap. They also help in placing the need that characterizes the ESP situation. Awareness is a matter of individual perception. Learners may have a clear idea about the 'necessities' of the target situation; they will certainly have a view as to what they want. It is quite possible that the learners' views will conflict with the perception of other interested parties: course designers, sponsors, and teachers.

← series of snap 2 of 4 < >

So in any course the need is what Hutchinson says: to give what the learner lacks. One should also know what the learner knows already so that what he/she lacks can be determined. The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency is called the learners' "lack". A main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out how good the learners' language use is, what is their current communicative competence? Using of placement tests which have validity, face validity, authenticity, reliable, is important. Wants are learners own view of what they "want" from the course, which might be in conflict with the course and the instructor's perceptions of learners' necessities and lacks.

Topic- 029: Analyzing Learning Needs

Learning needs can be analyzed by using different tools to collect a series of snapshots which allow them to compare a target situation with the current situation, thus leading to a focused course. After gathering information through forms, questionnaires, interviews, observation tests etc. the teacher has to analyze learners' needs. The data acquired does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do, so it becomes more difficult as the course progresses. A needs analysis provides a series of snapshots which contribute to our understanding. It differentiates a General English course from ESP course and provides

Which of the following objectives is concerned with timely completion?

Select the correct option

- ☐ Achievable
- ☐ Realistic
- ☐ Relevant
- ☒ Time-bound

← timely compl | 1 of 1... < >

Achievable objectives see whether set objectives are achievable and attainable in terms of resources, realistic facilities and logistics. When you identify objectives that are most important to you, you need to figure out ways you can make them come true. The objective needs to be attainable by you based on the skills you have and the constraints imposed.

Relevant objectives in terms of leading to the desired results and relate to needs analysis, your current communicative proficiency and what they should be at the end of the course. Firstly, that the goal or target being set with the individual is something they can achieve, and secondly it is also important to the organization, and is relevant to the organization's goals to achieve. The manager has to decide these objectives by considering the wider picture.

Time-bound Objectives are concerned with timely completion: When do you want to achieve the objectives? When will we accomplish/ complete this objective? In the objective somewhere, there has to be a time frame (Day/Month/Year) for when the task has to be started (if it's ongoing) and/or completed (if it's a term or project related). Time-bound means setting deadlines for the achievement of the objectives. Deadlines need to be both achievable and realistic. If you don't set a time, you will reduce the motivation and urgency required to execute the tasks. Agreed time frames create the necessary urgency to prompt action.

516 - Teaching Business Communication (Quiz 1)

Question # 1 of 10 (Start time: 01:19:37 PM, 22 May 2023)

Which of the following is the main stakeholder in the process of syllabus design?

Select the correct option

☐ Administration

☒ Learners

☐ Teachers

main stakeholder

1 of 1...

- Signature:.....

Negotiating priorities - this time, the aim is to guide learners towards a possible syllabus suggesting possible options. A variation on this is to give learners different options during the course they want to do this or that next week? Teachers might allow learners to develop their own tasks activities. For example, if the course is covering presentation skills, the learners could make their own presentations about the topics of their own presentations, or the length, or the criteria for evaluation. This approach emphasizes the need for consensus and compromise, which are important in the process of syllabus design.

51 / 211

Topic- 050: Using Learner's Input

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the process, their input is crucial. It gives insight to the teacher about the pace of the course and course content. The teacher can give the class a questionnaire to fill questions about their own preferences, and then pass the sheets around so everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that different people have different needs. This information is then used as the basis for a third question, the answer to which is to generate the syllabus in effect, the syllabus as generated by the group. It will be an amalgam of the different priorities that have been expressed by the learners.

©Copyright Virtual University of Pakistan

Teaching of Business Communication (ENG516)

in effect, the syllabus as generated by the group. It will be an amalgam of the different priorities that have been expressed by the learners.

Question # 4 of 10 (start time: 06:25:20 PM, 23 May 2023)

In business English communication teaching, an intensive course is designed for:

Select the correct option

☐ Specific objectives

☐ Improvement

☐ short periods

☒ a, b & c

Click to Save Answer & Mark

intensive

3 of 9

a broken monitor or shoddy materials, an electric socket which doesn't work can easily ruin a course, even well the syllabus has been thought out. Similarly, issues such as costs and budgets may have a significant influence on the course design; using an expensive 5-star hotel provides a very different learning experience to using a small classroom in the depths of a private language school or a spare conference room in company offices. Business English learners expect a high level of professionalism in the way a course is run, and such professionalism can and should be designed into the course.

One decision which needs to be made is whether the teaching is to be intensive or extensive. In practice, in the world of business English teaching, the terms seem to be used interchangeably. Intensive training can be anything from a few hours a day, for a few weeks, to ten days in a week, working all day. Intensive training is often used where time is short and where there are specific performance objectives to achieve. It tends to be much more focused than extensive training, and is often more efficient in its use of time (no need to warm learners up every 90 minutes, for example). For many learners, intensive training leads to noticeable improvement. Often intensive training goes under the name workshops or seminars, which aim to focus on specific topics. The other key advantage is that attendance is not normally a problem. Once the learner is committed to the course, he or she tends to stay.

Extensive training normally refers to regular but short sessions, such as two 90-minute sessions a week. This is typical of some in-company training, but also for pre-experienced groups such as

Question # 5 of 10 (start time: 05:35:29 PM, 23 May 2023)

The more we find out about our learners' needs, the more _____ it can seem to meet those needs.

Select the correct option

☐	easy
☐	simple
☒	difficult
☐	complicated

Click to Save Answer & Move to meet those

1 of 2

perspective:

- How does a particular learner learn?
- What affective factors need to be considered?
- What methods should I be using?

As ever in language teaching, the answer probably draws on both perspectives. There are several possible ways of looking at needs analysis, but what is important is to appreciate what a needs analysis does. It does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do in the classroom. Indeed, the more we find out about our learners' needs, as inevitably happens as a course progresses, the more difficult it can seem to meet those needs. What a needs analysis does is offering a chance to focus on those areas which are more relevant to the learner or the company. It provides a series of snapshots, none of which gives the complete 'truth', but all of which contribute to our understanding. The more snapshots we take, the better our understanding.

The needs analysis differentiates a general English course from a course for specific purposes. On certain courses, it can also be used as a justification for what happens. A needs analysis is unique to a specific training situation. There is no standard model of needs analysis, and there is no 'single best way to do it'. A needs analysis is not an objective exercise; it entails exercising judgment and finding compromises to make the best use of resources in a particular teaching context. It is about working with

Question # 6 of 10 (start time: 05:36:51 PM, 23 May 2023)

One common tool for doing communication needs analysis is a _____ test, which is a test designed to provide a comparison with other learners.

Select the correct option

☐	formative
☐	cloze
☐	summative
☒	placement

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next

placement

3 of 16

Teaching of Business Communication (ENG516)

confidentiality exist. In face-to-face interaction or while observing a meeting, teachers can seek answers to previously thought out questions.

Topic - 032: Main Priorities

The other main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out the current communication competence of learners. One common tool for this is a placement test, which is a test designed to provide a comparison with other learners (or with known standards or benchmarks) so that learners can be placed with others having similar needs and ability. Characteristics of a placement test are:

Validity: in that it should test what it is designed to test.

Face validity: Face validity is to be credible to the learner, if we give a grammar test to a learner who is interested to improve presentation skills, the prospective learner may start to question the judgment.

Authenticity: Tied with this is the question of authenticity, that the test should reflect the target language, and the way it is used (this is why a placement test should, ideally, follow the target situation analysis).

Reliability: It should be reliable so that if different testers do the same test, the result should be the same; likewise if the learner took the test two days later, they should get the same result.

Besides suiting the requirements of the learners' specific situation, other characteristics are that it should be quick, and easy to administer. International tests are available for purchase and on the internet. Disadvantage is that they are tied to using particular course book or doing a particular course (they check

MC190400953: FARHANA SALEEM

ENG516 - Teaching Business Communication (Quiz 1)

Quiz Start Time: 05:

Question # 8 of 10 (Start time: 05:38:22 PM, 23 May 2023)

In Business English teaching the focus should be on using _____ to perform tasks, not just to talk about it.

Select the correct option

☐	dialect
☐	creole
☒	language
☐	pidgin

Click to Save Answer & Move t

perform tasks

1 of 1

include course schedule, departmental requirements. The learning activities and tasks which help learners develop their communicative competence – linguistic, socio-cultural and pragmatic.

Those language items are selected which the learner needs to know and concentrate on the content and the meaning of the interactions. A syllabus can be organized in various ways: According to topic, task or around activities, such as presentations, negotiations and telephoning.

Topic- 045: What is to be Covered and in what Order

The course objectives point to what we want the course to achieve. Once we know what we want to achieve, we can move on to thinking about the syllabus. A syllabus is, essentially, a list of what is to be covered and in what order. The course should focus on the language needed. In Business English teaching the focus should be on using language to perform tasks, not just to talk about it. Most Business English learners need to be able to communicate within a certain context, so the syllabus must reflect the discourse that the learner will face in the workplace.

The language needs to be learnable, and according to the level of the learners. Learning must be achievable in the time provided, e.g. it is unrealistic to suggest that a complete beginner will be able to take part in complex negotiations after a week's teaching.

A grid or framework sets out the aims and objectives, followed by all the _____ that we believe are necessary for someone to be able to meet those objectives.

Select the correct option

☐	enlistments
☒	elements
☐	embodiments
☐	enrollments

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

grid

4 of 5

into orderly, manageable chunks, with both the content and the order matched to the learners' situation.

146: Using a Grid

A useful technique is to use a grid or framework in making a syllabus. A grid or framework sets out aims and objectives, followed by all the elements that we believe are necessary for someone to be able to meet those objectives. The main components of this framework are based on the competencies defined as: Linguistic competence (Language based), Discourse competence (identification of possible elements learners will encounter, specialist knowledge) and Intercultural competence (communication in international business/educational environment).

A syllabus will take into account not only what is to be learnt but how it is to be learnt and how it is assessed in terms of achieving course objectives, using the guidelines offered by communicative teaching and the insights gained through the needs analysis. Grids normally consist of a combination of the following components, sometimes called threads, because they weave through the syllabus and could be seen as holding it together:

- Grammar (e.g. tenses, word order, verb patterns, relative clauses)
- Lexis (e.g. vocabulary, idioms, expressions, collocations)
- Pronunciation (e.g. intonation, rhythm, stress, chunking)
- Functions (e.g. complaining, agreeing, persuading, explaining)
- Business skills (e.g. presenting, negotiating, telephoning, socializing)
- Topics (e.g. finance, marketing, production, management)
- Learning strategies (e.g. learning styles, recording vocabulary, preparing for a test)
- Situations (e.g. assisting visitors, checking into a hotel, running a meeting)
- Texts (e.g. examples of spoken or written discourse)

← topics of 1 of 2... < >

success of the course. These sheets can be used to reflect the course later.

- What I want from this course
- What I don't want from this course
- What the group wants from this course
- Name:.....
- Date:.....
- Signature:.....

Negotiating priorities - this time, the aim is to guide learners towards a possible syll. suggesting possible options. A variation on this is to give learners different options during the co they want to do this or that next week? Teachers might allow learners to develop their own activities. For example, if the course is covering presentation skills, the learners could make d about the topics of their own presentations, or the length, or the criteria for success. Such an a emphasizes the need for consensus and compromise, which are important elements in group work.

Topic- 050: Using Learner's Input

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the process, their input is crucial. It gives to the teacher about the pace of the course and course content. The teacher can give the questionnaire to fill questions about their own preferences, and then pass the sheets around everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that differen have different needs. This information is then used as the basis for a third question, the answer to

©Copyright Virtual University of Pakistan

Question # 6 of 10 (Start time: 04:18:38 PM, 23 May 2023)

The more we find out about our learners' needs, the more _____ it can seem to meet those need

Select the correct option

- ☐ easy
- ☐ simple
- ☐ complicated
- ☐ difficult

meet those

1 of 2

learning needs perspective. Here we are looking at the learning needs from the individual learner's perspective:

- How does a particular learner learn?
- What affective factors need to be considered?
- What methods should I be using?

32 / 211

are saved

As ever in language teaching, the answer probably draws on both possible ways of looking at needs analysis, but what is important is to appreciate what a needs analysis does. It does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do in the classroom. Indeed, the more we find out about our learners' needs, as inevitably happens as a course progresses, the more difficult it can seem to meet those needs. What a needs analysis does is offering a chance to focus on those areas which are more relevant to the learner or the company. It provides a series of snapshots, none of which gives the complete 'truth', but all of which contribute to our understanding. The more snapshots we take, the better our understanding.

The needs analysis differentiates a general English course from a course for specific purposes. On certain courses, it can also be used as a justification for what happens. A needs analysis is unique to a specific training situation. There is no standard model of needs analysis, and there is no 'single best way' to do it. A needs analysis is not an objective exercise; it entails exercising judgment and finding compromises to make the best use of resources in a particular teaching context. It is about working with

can be negotiated

1 of 1

Lesson 09

DESIGNING A COURSE-III

Topic- 049: Negotiating the Syllabus

The syllabus can be changed during the course. With most classes, often the best way to identify what should be included in a course is for the teacher to sit down with the learners (and other stakeholders) and negotiate the syllabus. This has the major advantage that the learners are usually much more motivated because they have helped design what is to be done. The syllabus can be negotiated at any time - indeed, the teacher and learners can re-negotiate as the course progresses. Sometimes, there are practical issues which influence what actually happens, such as availability of video equipment, or the teacher's own expertise and experience. Sometimes, it may be necessary for the teacher to guide the discussions so that the end result is achievable, or meets a sponsor's aims.

Generating the Syllabus through Learners: Many activities can be devised for negotiating the syllabus can be used on day one of a course, for example the following: What the group wants - the teacher gives learners a sheet. They fill in the first two questions on their own, and then pass the sheet round so that everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that different people want different things. The sheets are then used as a basis for the third question, the answer to which is, in effect, the syllabus and which will have to be some amalgam of the differing priorities that have surfaced. The learners come to know that what happens is actually a compromise. Getting them to sign at the bottom of the page is a useful way to remind them that they are part of the

It is naive to base a _____ design on the target objectives because more important skills.

Select the correct option

☐	assessment
☒	course
☐	evaluation
☐	methodology

naive

1 of 1

also the best way we have to produce a focused course. A needs analysis in its most basic form is essentially a blend of information-gathering activities which use a variety of different perspectives. However, simply collecting data is not enough - it is in the interpretation and use of this data where the needs analysis really makes its power felt.

Topic - 027: Learning Needs

The Business Communication course designer has to consider the factors that the expert communicator needs to know in order to function effectively in the workplace. This question may be recorded in terms of language skills, strategies, subject knowledge etc. But analysis does not show how the expert communicator learnt the language items, skills and strategies that he/she uses. So it is naive to base a course design on the target objectives, because more important are the actual tools needed to acquire these skills. An example of this can be seen in the matter of choosing a text.

If preparing a course of Systems for engineers, we give them the usual texts which are long and boring in the Business Communication class, it would not be effective learning. The motivation which they have for their area might not be carried over to the Business Communication class. So this text does not serve their learning needs. It would be appropriate to look for texts which are interesting and humorous, in order to generate motivation to learn English, for example, James B. Herbolich's box kite project (1979), in which Engineering students at a Kuwaiti university had to make a box kite and then to write a manual for constructing it. It is interesting to consider how this activity reflects the target situation.

Question # 10 of 10 (Start time: 08:53:39 PM, 23 May 2023)

The syllabus components of Business English must reflect the _____ w

Select the correct option

☒	discourse
☐	midcourse
☐	recourse
☐	course must reflect

1 of 2

ing of Business Communication (ENG516)

VU

ed and how you will be giving feedback. The syllabus states the actions to be taken in order to re the aims and objectives. It lists what is to be covered during the course and states an order.

The syllabus can be re-negotiated at any time. Sometimes, in the middle of a course, a student or help because he/she needs to prepare a presentation for an unexpected trip. It usually is a very nic syllabus and you need to be flexible enough to adapt to new and changeable circumstances.

- 044: Syllabus Components

usiness English students need to communicate within a certain context, so the syllabus must reflect discourse they are confronted within their workplace. For efficiency, teachers must ensure that the ure to useful language is not random. So, the course designer's job includes finding the most ion language forms that will help the learner to communicate and planning when and how the er will encounter them. Students in the corporate finance field and usually have to present figures esults in English, so including the following components in the syllabus, are important:

- Dealing with numbers and figures
- Describing trends
- Corporate finance vocabulary
- Understanding and producing financial reports
- Giving presentations

Content items are words, structures, topics and process items like tasks, methods. Syllabus onents should reflect topics, themes, situations and define types of assessments, and design learning ities and tasks. The syllabus should provide contact information to the instructor, list office hours

The syllabus components of Business English must reflect the _____ w

Select the correct option

☒	discourse
☐	midcourse
☐	recourse
☐	course

must reflect

2 of 2

include course schedule, departmental requirements. The learning activities and tasks which help learners develop their communicative competence – linguistic, socio-cultural and pragmatic.

Those language items are selected which the learner needs to know and concentrate on the content and the meaning of the interactions. A syllabus can be organized in various ways: According to topic, time or around activities, such as presentations, negotiations and telephoning.

Topic- 045: What is to be Covered and in what Order

The course objectives point to what we want the course to achieve. 47 / 211 wh to achieve, we can move on to thinking about the syllabus. A syllabus is, essentially, a list of what is covered and in what order. The course should focus on the language needed. In Business English teaching the focus should be on using language to perform tasks, not just to talk about it. Most Business English learners needed to be able to communicate within a certain context, so the syllabus must reflect discourse that the learner will face in the workplace.

The language needs to be learnable, and according to the level of the learners. Learning must be achievable in the time provided, e.g. it is unrealistic to suggest that a complete beginner will be able to take part in complex negotiations after a week's teaching.

6:56
vulms.vu.edu.pk

Lecture 7 - Teaching Business Communication (Quiz 7)
Quiz starts in 10 min

Question # 2 of 10 (Start time: 09:05:36 PM, 23 May 2023)

In Business English teaching the focus should be on using _____ to perform tasks, not just to talk about _____.

Select the correct option

☐	creole
☐	pidgin
☐	dialect
☒	language

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next Question

←
perform task
1 of 1
>

(virtual office hours if possible, which includes some spend in marking), and state the current academic term. It should include the authors and titles of prescribed books, list all assignments, quizzes etc. include course schedule, departmental requirements. The learning activities and tasks which help learners develop their communicative competence – linguistic, socio-cultural and pragmatic.

Those language items are selected which the learner needs to know and concentrate on the core and the meaning of the interactions. A syllabus can be organized in various ways: According to topic, or around activities, such as presentations, negotiations and telephoning.

Topic- 045: What is to be Covered and in what Order

The course objectives point to what we want the course to achieve. Once we know what we want to achieve, we can move on to thinking about the syllabus. A syllabus is, essentially, a list of what is to be covered and in what order. The course should focus on the language needed. In Business English teaching the focus should be on using language to perform tasks, not just to talk about it. Most Business English learners need to be able to communicate within a certain context, so the syllabus must reflect the discourse that the learner will face in the workplace.

The language needs to be learnable, and according to the level of the learners. Learning must be achievable in the time provided, e.g. it is unrealistic to suggest that a complete beginner will be able to take part in complex negotiations after a week's teaching.

©Copyright Virtual University of Pakistan

Question # 3 of 10 (Start time: 09:06:25 PM, 23 May 2023)

It is naive to base a _____ design on the target objectives because more important are the actual tools needed to acquire these skills.

Select the correct option

- ☐ methodology
- ☒ course
- ☐ evaluation
- ☐ assessment

Click to Save Answer & Move to

naiv

1 of 1

The Business Communication course designer has to consider the following question: 'What do the expert communicators need to know in order to function effectively in this situation?' The answer to this question may be recorded in terms of language skills, strategies, subject knowledge etc. But analysis does not show how the expert communicator learnt the language items, skills and strategies that he/she uses. So it is naive to base a course design on the target objectives, because more important are the actual tools needed to acquire these skills. An example of this can be seen in the matter of choosing a text.

If preparing a course of Systems for engineers, we give them the usual texts which are long and boring in the Business Communication class, it would not be effective learning. The motivation which they have for their area might not be carried over to the Business Communication class. So this text does not serve their learning needs. It would be appropriate to look for texts which are interesting and humorous, in order to generate motivation to learn English, for example, James B. Herbolich's box kite project (1979), in which Engineering students at a Kuwaiti university had to make a box kite and then write a manual for constructing it. It is interesting to consider how this activity reflects the target situation.

reflect

6 of 21

assessed and how you will be giving feedback. The syllabus states the actions to be taken in order to achieve the aims and objectives. It lists what is to be covered during the course and states an order.

The syllabus can be re-negotiated at any time. Sometimes, in the middle of a course, a student asks for help because he/she needs to prepare a presentation for an unexpected trip. It usually is a very dynamic syllabus and you need to be flexible enough to adapt to new and changeable circumstances.

Topic- 044: Syllabus Components

47 / 211

Business English students need to communicate within a certain context, so the syllabus must reflect the discourse they are confronted within their workplace. For efficiency, teachers must ensure that the exposure to useful language is not random. So, the course designer's job includes finding the most common language forms that will help the learner to communicate and planning when and how the learner will encounter them. Students in the corporate finance field and usually have to present figures and results in English, so including the following components in the syllabus, are important:

- Dealing with numbers and figures
- Describing trends
- Corporate finance vocabulary
- Understanding and producing financial reports
- Giving presentations

Content items are words, structures, topics and process items like tasks, methods. Syllabus components should reflect topics, themes, situations and define types of assessments, and design learning activities and tasks. The syllabus should provide contact information to the instructor, list office hours or virtual office hours if possible, which includes time spent in marking, and state the current academic term. It should include the authors and titles of prescribed books, list all assignments, quizzes exams

Which of the following is the main stakeholder in the process of syllabus design?

Select the correct option

☐	Learners
☐	Teachers
☐	Administration
☐	Policy makers

Click to Save Answer & Move

main stake

1 of 1...

- What the group wants from this course
- Name:.....
- Date:.....
- Signature:.....

Negotiating priorities - this time, the aim is to guide learners towards a possible solution by suggesting possible options. A variation on this is to give learners different options during the week they want to do this or that next week? Teachers might allow learners to choose their own activities. For example, if the course is covering presentation skill, learners could be asked to prepare about the topics of their own presentations, or the length, or the criteria for success. Such an activity emphasizes the need for consensus and compromise, which are important elements in group work.

Topic- 050: Using Learner's Input

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the process, their input is crucial. It gives an opportunity to the teacher about the pace of the course and course content. The teacher can give the learners a questionnaire to fill questions about their own preferences, and then pass the sheets around the class so everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that different learners have different needs. This information is then used as the basis for a third question, the answer to which is: What do we want to do?

8. In business communication while designing a course, objectives can be made for _____ skills.

Select the correct option

☐

negotiation

☐

presentation

☐

writing

☒

all the given options

Click to see

objectives can

3 of 4

Setting objectives for an individual course is an ideal situation for a tailor-made course. Individual's needs provide the trainee the opportunity to have a customized program and allow the teacher to go at his/her own pace, time, content and approach.

For 'Business Communication in English' for open group course or a public group, participants come from a wide audience and from a wide range of areas. In such a general BE course or executive English course participants will come from perhaps, geographical, corporate and trainer needs to be careful to fulfill the diverse objectives of such a group and objectives.

Close group course should be more or less a homogenous group of learners. Learners may be from same company, same professional function, same department, easiest in terms of objectives. Objectives can be made for meeting skills/ negotiation skills, presentation skills, writing skills, telephoning etc.

Objectives are not written in stone to be slavishly followed. It is an ongoing, interactive process. A learning centered approach will allow the designer to add and amend the course at any stage. Reflective practice is particularly important. The teacher and trainer keeps on thinking about ways of improving practice and incorporating these into future objectives. To be negotiated in beginning and during the course, regular feedback sessions will bring out trainees' strengths and weaknesses.

Question # 4 of 10 (Start time: 08:31:42 PM, 23 May 2023)

In business communication while designing a course, SMART Objectives are kept _____ bound.

Select the correct option

☐ organization☐ space☒ time☐ person

Click to Save Answer

bound

2 of 7

Teaching of Business Communication (ENG516)

Topic- 039: Smart Objectives

Many organizations are increasingly using the SMART and SMARTER acronym within setting and performance appraisal in management environments. The use of SMART objective is limited to business and performance management, indeed SMART possibly started in the work personal development. SMARTER is an acronym to help in the writing of objectives, which can be managing performance or for developmental purposes. Objectives should be specific, measurable, achievable, relevant, and time-bound, to specify what they need to achieve, answering six questions: Who? What? Where? When? Which? Why?

A specific objective has a much greater chance of being accomplished than a general goal. To set a specific objective you need to answer the six "W" questions: Who: Who is involved? What: What do you want to accomplish? Where: Identify a location. When: Establish a time frame. Which: Identify requirements and constraints. Why: Specific reasons, purpose or benefits of accomplishing the goal. Instead of saying: "Awareness of ..." it should be "Learners will be able to speak about the ..." Rule of conciseness and correctness should be applied.

Measurable objectives measure whether objectives are met or not. They establish concrete criteria for measuring progress toward the attainment of each objective you set. When you measure progress, you stay on track, reach your target dates, and experience the feeling of achievement that drives you on to continued effort required to reach your objective. To determine if your objective is measurable, ask questions such as how much? How many? How will I know when it is accomplished? If the objective

Question # 5 of 10 (Start time: 08:32:28 PM, 23 May 2023)

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the business English teaching process, their input gives insight to:

Select the correct option

☒	teacher
☐	administration
☐	leadership
☐	customer

Click to Save Answer

main sta

1 of 1...

- What the group wants from this course
- Name:.....
- Date:.....
- Signature:.....

Negotiating priorities - this time, the aim is to guide learners towards a possible syllabus by suggesting possible options. A variation on this is to give learners different options during the course: do they want to do this or that next week? Teachers might allow learners to develop their own tasks or activities. For example, if the course is covering presentation skills, the learner could be asked to prepare a presentation about the topics of their own presentations, or the length, or the criteria for success. This activity emphasizes the need for consensus and compromise, which are important elements of business communication.

51 / 211

Topic- 050: Using Learner's Input

Since the learners are the main stakeholders in the process, their input is crucial. It gives insight to the teacher about the pace of the course and course content. The teacher can give the class a questionnaire to fill questions about their own preferences, and then pass the sheets around so that everyone can see what their colleagues want and do not want and can understand that different people have different needs. This information is then used as the basis for a third question, the answer to which is

Question # 6 of 10 (Start time: 08:33:24 PM, 23 May 2023)

The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency can be referred as the learner's _____

Select the correct option

☐	necessities
☐	wants
☒	lacks
☐	gaps

Click to See

← existing proficiency 2 of 2 < >

necessities the learner lacks. One target need would be to read texts in a particular subject area. Whether or not the learners need instruction in this will depend on how they can do it already. The target proficiency in other words needs to be matched against the existing proficiency of the learners. The gap between the two can be referred to as the learner's lacks.

c. Wants: So far we have looked at target needs objectively with no active role by the learners. If learners too have a view of what their needs are - their wants. We have stressed the need that characterizes the ESP situation. Awareness is a matter of individual learners. If learners have a clear idea about the 'necessities' of the target situation; they will certainly have their own wants. It is quite possible that the learners' views will conflict with the perception of other interested parties: course designers, sponsors, and teachers.

So in any course the need is what Hutchinson says: to give what the learner lacks. One should also know what the learner knows already so that what he/she lacks can be determined. The gap between the target proficiency and existing proficiency is called the learners' "lack". A main part of a communication needs analysis is finding out how good the learners' language use is, what is their current communicative competence? Using of placement tests which have validity, face validity, authenticity, reliable, is important. Wants are learners own view of what they "want" from the course, which might be in conflict with the course and the instructor's perceptions of learners' necessities and lacks.

Topic- 029: Analyzing Learning Needs

Learning needs can be analyzed by using different tools to collect a series of snapshots which allow them to compare a target situation with the current situation, thus leading to a focused course. After gathering information through forms, questionnaires, interviews, observation tests etc. the teacher has to analyze learners' needs. The data acquired does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do, so it becomes more difficult as the course progresses. A needs analysis provides a series of snapshots which contribute to our understanding. It differentiates a General English course from ESP course and provides

Question # 7 of 10 (Start time: 09:12:12 PM, 23 May 2023)

The more we find out about our learners' needs, the more _____ it can seem to meet those needs

Select the correct option

☐

complicated

☐

easy

☒

difficult

☐

simple

Click to Save Answer

seem to

1 of 4

Another way of looking at needs is to think about them in terms of what and how we might teach. Can we translate needs into a list of products which we as teachers deliver to the learner? This could be a list of language items, for example, or a list of skills, such as giving presentations or asking questions in meetings, or should needs be seen in terms of the process of delivery, with the emphasis on how the learning takes place? Here we are talking about the training as seen from the individual learner's perspective:

- How does a particular learner learn?
- What affective factors need to be considered?
- What methods should I be using?

As ever in language teaching, the answer probably draws on both perspectives. There are several possible ways of looking at needs analysis, but what is important is to appreciate what a needs analysis does. It does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do in the classroom. Indeed, the more we find out about our learners' needs, as inevitably happens as a course progresses, the more difficult it can seem to meet those needs. What a needs analysis does is offering a chance to focus on those areas which are more relevant to the learner or the company. It provides a series of snapshots, none of which gives the complete 'truth', but all of which contribute to our understanding. The more snapshots we take, the better our understanding.

The needs analysis differentiates a general English course from a course for specific purposes. On certain courses, it can also be used as a justification for what happens. A needs analysis is unique to a specific training situation. There is no standard model of needs analysis, and there is no 'single best way' to do it. A needs analysis is not an objective exercise; it entails exercising judgment and finding compromises to make the best use of resources in a particular teaching context. It is about working with

7:06

VoLTE
4G

87 vulms.vu.edu.pk

Question # 10 of 10 (Start time: 09:15:16 PM, 23 May 2023)

While teaching a business communication course, there is no _____ best way to do need analysis, no hard and fast rule

Select the correct option

☐ double

☐ single

☐ triple

☐ middle

Click to Save Answer & Move to Next

←

single b

1 of 2...

<

>

- What affective factors need to be considered?
- What methods should I be using?

As ever in language teaching, the answer probably draws on both perspectives. There are several possible ways of looking at needs analysis, but what is important is to appreciate what a needs analysis does. It does not produce a sharply defined list of things to do in the classroom. Indeed, the more we find out about our learners' needs, as inevitably happens as a course progresses, the more difficult it can seem to meet those needs. What a needs analysis does is offering a chance to focus on those areas which are more relevant to the learner or the company. It provides a series of snapshots, none of which gives the complete 'truth', but all of which contribute to our understanding. The more snapshots we take, the better our understanding.

The needs analysis differentiates a general English course from a course for specific purposes. On certain courses, it can also be used as a justification for what happens. A needs analysis is unique to a specific training situation. There is no standard model of needs analysis, and there is no 'single best way' to do it. A needs analysis is not an objective exercise; it entails exercising judgment and finding compromises to make the best use of resources in a particular teaching context. It is about working with

©Copyright Virtual University of Pakistan

32