

Introduction to ELT (ENG503)

- ✚ Introduction to ELT: ELT stands for English Language Teaching, which refers to the process of teaching English as a second or foreign language. Example: An ELT teacher uses various methods and approaches to help students learn English in a classroom setting.
- ✚ Nature and Functions of Language: Language is a system of communication that consists of rules, conventions, and symbols used to convey meaning. Functions of language include communication, expression, and social interaction. Example: The sentence "How are you?" is a common way to initiate a conversation and show interest in someone's well-being.
- ✚ History of English Language: English is a Germanic language that originated in England and has evolved over centuries through influences from other languages such as Latin, Greek, and French. Example: The word "OK" is an American English expression that originated in the 19th century and is now widely used around the world.
- ✚ English as an International Language (EIL): EIL refers to the use of English as a global language for international communication in business, education, science, and entertainment. Example: English is widely used as a medium of instruction in universities around the world, even in countries where English is not the first language.
- ✚ English in Pakistan: English is an official language in Pakistan and is widely used in education, government, and business. Example: Many Pakistani students learn English as a second language in school and use it to pursue higher education and career opportunities.
- ✚ Psychology of Language: The psychology of language studies how language is processed in the mind and how it relates to thought, behavior, and culture. Example: Research has shown that language can influence thought and perception, and that bilingual individuals may have cognitive advantages.
- ✚ Second Language Acquisition: Second language acquisition refers to the process of learning a new language after the first language has been acquired. Example: A student who learns English as a second language may go through stages of language development, such as silent period, formulaic language, and fluent language.
- ✚ Methods and Approaches of Language Teaching: Various methods and approaches have been developed to teach languages, such as the grammar-translation method, the audio-lingual method, and the communicative approach. Example: The communicative approach emphasizes authentic communication and task-based learning, such as role-plays and group discussions.

ENG503_Save Me Please

- ✚ Teaching of Listening Skills: Teaching listening skills involves helping students develop the ability to understand spoken language, including pronunciation, intonation, and comprehension. Example: A teacher may use audio recordings or videos to practice listening comprehension and encourage students to repeat what they hear.
- ✚ Teaching of Speaking Skills: Teaching speaking skills involves helping students develop the ability to produce spoken language, including pronunciation, fluency, and vocabulary. Example: A teacher may use speaking activities such as debates, presentations, and conversations to encourage students to practice speaking.
- ✚ Teaching of Reading Skills: Teaching reading skills involves helping students develop the ability to understand written language, including decoding, comprehension, and vocabulary. Example: A teacher may use reading materials such as texts, articles, and stories to practice reading comprehension and encourage students to read extensively.
- ✚ Teaching of Writing Skills/ Intergrated Skills: Teaching writing skills involves helping students develop the ability to produce written language, including grammar, vocabulary, and coherence. Integrated skills involve combining language skills such as reading, writing, speaking, and listening. Example: A teacher may use writing activities such as essays, reports, and emails to practice writing skills and encourage students to integrate language skills.
- ✚ Assessment of Language Skills: Assessment of language skills involves evaluating students' language proficiency and progress, including reading, writing, speaking, and listening. Example: A teacher may use language proficiency tests such as TOEFL or IELTS to assess students' language skills and provide feedback.
- ✚ Teaching the Sounds of Language: Teaching the sounds of language involves helping students develop phonological awareness and pronunciation skills. Example: A teacher may use phonetic transcriptions and pronunciation practice to help students learn the sounds of English.
- ✚ Teaching the Words of English Language: Teaching the words of English language involves helping students develop vocabulary and lexical skills. Example: A teacher may use flashcards, word lists, and contextualized vocabulary practice to help students learn new words.
- ✚ Teaching the Sentence Patterns of English Language: Teaching the sentence patterns of English language involves helping students develop grammatical and syntactical skills. Example: A teacher may use grammar rules, sentence diagrams, and sentence construction practice to help students learn sentence patterns.
- ✚ Studying and Teaching the Meaning of Language: Studying and teaching the meaning of language involves helping students develop semantic and pragmatic skills. Example: A teacher may use contextualized language practice, such as role-plays and discussions, to help students learn the meaning of language in context.

ENG503_Save Me Please

Groups by Maha Malik

<https://chat.whatsapp.com/DxMf8E7A78d6EVdqjbOzI>